Maputo Rebels End Talks

Guerrillas Say Pretoria Favors Mozambique

Caned Press Internate LISBON — Mozambican anticommunist rebels, charging that Foreign Minister R.F. Botha of South Africa was a hiased mediator, said Friday they were ahan-doning peace negotiations in Pre-toria with the Mozambican

"The negotiations have come to a dead end without any advantage in our continuing them." said Jorge Correia, a spokesman for the Mo-zambican National Resistance.

He said the talks, which started Oct. 3 under South African sponsorship, had come to "an end with-out legs to walk on" because the Maputo government lacked "good

"There is no point in continuing encounters in Pretoria because Pik Botha, who has always demonstrated himself to be an unconditional ally of the Marxist-Leninist regime. does not merit our confidence." Mr. Correia said.

The South African government bas generally been regarded as the main supporter and source of arms for the resistance, which maintains an office in Portugal, the former colonial ruler of Mozambique.

There was no immediate government confirmation in either Pretoria or Maputo that the talks had collapsed. The rebel announcement came 24 hours after they said they were launching a countrywide of-fensive to "bend militarily" Mr. Machel's government.

Rumors of Slaying Plots Spread by Indian Press

NEW DELHI - Newspapers in New Delhi printed accounts Friday of Indira Gandhi's assassination that were completely unattributed or attributed to unnamed sources. These articles and other reports gave rise to many rumors in the city, which encountered another day of street violence in reaction to the slaying Weonesday.

ladian authorities have said that the two assassins were Sikhs serving on the slain prime minister's security guard. One was killed seconds after Mrs. Gandhi was shot and the other was wounded. Friday's newspaper reports suggested that both the CIA and Indian Army generals were also involved

The U.S. State Department, meanwhile, protested formally to the Soviet Union for insinuating that the CIA had been involved in the slaying of Mrs. Gandhi.

The most startling of the New Delhi rumors in print were in the Statesman newspaper, which claimed that the survivor of the two suspected assassins, Saiwant Singh, told investigators that the conspirafue coase-fire agreement cy had been planned by unnamed reached list month followed a senior Indian Army officers led by a major general.

Pólitical Foes Of Rajiv Gandhi Criticize Failure To Curb Rioting

By William Claiborne

Washington Past Service NEW DELHI — Less than 48 hours after he was sworn in as india's sixth prime minister, Rajiv Gandhi was condemned by opposition leaders for failing to control the violence that has followed his mother's assassination. The official death toll in the sectarian rioting climbed far beyond the government's official totals. and mob rampages continued in many states. Unofficially, more than 500 people have died, 200 of them in New Delhi.

Mr. Gandhi, 40, appealed Friday in an unscheduled television broadcast for an end to "communal madness" that he said would weaken the unity of India.

Indian news agencies reported Friday night that the entire security staff at the prime minister's residence had been disbanded and re-placed with intelligence agents of the central government. Indira Gandhi was shot and killed Wednesday by two police guards, both Sikhs, who had been assigned to the house to protect the prime

Thursday night, a-government spokesman claimed that only 12 persons had died in sectarian rioting, two of them in New Delhi, and on Friday the state-run radio and television re-ferred to unofficial figures com-piled by Indian news agencies as wild rumors."

Mr. Gandhi Friday night assured his party officials that the situation was "under control." dead Tuesday in a reservoir on the Vistula River. He had been kid-napped Oct. 19 in the northern city of Torun. Three lower-ranking police officers in the Internal Affairs Ministry have already been charged in the case.

At the same time, General Zenon Platek, who supervised one of the colonels, was ordered suspended.

Jerzy Urhan, the government spokesman, said in an interview that an autopsy on the priest's body firmed that the priest had been murdered, Mr. Urban said that as a result of this determination he exseized for the crime would be formally charged with murder soon.

Mr. Urhan said that the political opposition was seeking to exploit the situation for political ends.

He appeared on the nightly television news saving that attempts by some Solidarity sympathizers to create committees to monitor the police had no legal hasis. He also said that the outlawed Committee for the Defense of Workers, or KOR, would not be permitted to resurrect itself over the body of Father Popieluszko.

As the white coffin containing his body was brought to the church Friday evening from Bialystok, where the autopsy was performed, a crowd of thousands of emotional mourners surged toward it.

Reagan, Mondale Coveting New York In Late Contest for the Vital Northeast

As Tuesday's election approaches. Mr. Reagan appears to have a solid lead in the region. But Mr. Mondale's advisers contend that an intensive effort by him and his running mate, Representative Geraldine A. Ferraro, has increased the "volatility" in the industrial Northeast enough to tighten the contests

Throughout the region, a common line of analysis unites officials on both sides: If Mondale cannot win in the Northeast, he is unlikely to win anywhere.

Strategists on both sides agreed that Pennsylvania, with 25 electoral votes, was the most closely contested state in the region.

The four presidential and vice presidential candidates all campaigned in New York on Thursday. The Reagan re-election cam-paign viewed the visits by the president and Vice President George Bush as part of an effort to preclude any chance Mr. Mondale might have of attaining the 270 safe for the president.

Mondale officials said they had not been polling in the Northeast, but they did not contest the assertion that Mr. Reagan was leading throughout an I l-state region that has more than one-fourth of the nation's 538 electoral votes.

Aside from Pennsylvania, Mr. Mondale appears to be strongest in Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Maryland. Reagan strategists count Connecticut and New Jersey, whose total of 16 electoral votes is the third highest in the region, as

Beirut Paper Says Lebanon May Ask U.K., France to Patrol Israeli Border

BEIRUT - Lehanon may propose that British and French troops police the Lebanese-Israeti border as part of future security arrangements to end Israel's occupation of southern Lehanon, a Beirut newspaper

The independent An-Nahar, which has close contacts with the government, said the proposal was expected to be put forward in talks with Israel that are heduled to begin Monday under United Nations

An-Nahar said the proposal was intended to resolve controversy over which force should guard the 60-mile (97-kilometer) border strip after an Israeli

The capital, now under the tenuous control of the Lebanese Army, has been relatively calm in recent weeks, but police reported gunbattles Friday along sections of the Green Line that separates the city's Moslem and Christian sectors. Police had no immediate details on what set off the shooting but said the army closed several crossings. Seven persons were reportedly hurt.

The British foreign secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, on a visit to Israel earlier this week, said Britain would "give consideration" to joining the UN force after an Israeli withdrawal, Israei has been insisting that the Israeli-supported South Lebanon Army militia be put in charge of security in the border area, but Syria and Lebanon reportedly oppose the demand.

On Thursday, Vice President Abdul-Halim Khaddam of Syria declared his country's support for the UN-sponsored talks to end Israel's occupation, but said Syria would not provide guarantees against future movement of Syrian troops in Lebanon or guerrilla attacks against Israel. Meanwhile, U.S. and Israeli officials met in Jerusalem, and Synan and Lebanese leaders conferred in Beirut to set the stage for the talks.

Israei has dropped a demand that Syria withdraw the soldiers it has ned stationed in Lebanon since 1976 concessions that threatened Syria's security.

at the same time Israel withdraws from southern Lebanon. Instead, Israeli officials say they want Syria to guarantee that its soldiers in eastern Lebanon will not advance, and will prevent Palestinian guerrillas from infiltrating territory evacuated by Israeli troops.

In expressing Syria's approval of the talks, Mr.
Khaddam said: "Syria is not prepared whether directly or indirectly, through or without intermediaries, to give any guaran-tees, commitments or participation to the Israelis or non-Israelis. This is final." Mr. Khaddam's visit was his second to Lebanon since Syria emerged as the main power broker in Lebanon after the collapse of a U.S. peacekeeping effort in February.

Troops Fire Tear Gas on West Bank

JERUSALEM (AP) - Israeli soldiers fired tear gas Friday to disperse Palestinians throwing stones in Nablus, the largest Palestinian city in the West Bank. The incident began after several hundred Palestinians railied and began chanting anti-Israeli slogans in the main marketplace after morning prayers at a nearby mosque, the Palestine Press Service reported.

Meanwhile, the Israeli military imposed a curtew on Dahariye, a village south of Hebron, after Palestinians smashed the window of an Israeli civilian vehicle Thursday, military sources said Friday. No one was

The disturbance Thursday night coincided with the 67th anniversary of the Balfour Declaration, which led to the creation of Israel by declaring Britain's support for a Jewish homeland. It is a traditional day of protest by Palestinians. There has been a week of sporadic violence in the West Bank after an Arab bus was attacked last Sunday with a rocket by Jewish extremists, killing one passenger.

Iran Says It Will Attack U.S. Interests

TEHRAN (AFP) — Iran will attack U.S. interests throughout the world as long as the United States threatens the Iranian revolution. President Hojatoleslam Ali Khamenei said Friday in a speech marking the fifth anniversary of the taking of hostages at the U.S. Embassy here. "We shall not be content merely with not having friendly relations with the United States," Mr. Khamenei said at a prayer session at Tehran University. "So long as U.S. policies seek to harm the revolution and the Islamic Republic of Iran, we shall feel justified in responding likewise, and attack American interests throughout the world." and attack American interests throughout the world."

"We have nothing against the American people," he said. "We are opposed to the domneering policies of the United States — that is the message of the hostage-taking." Seventy hostages originally were seized at the embassy and the last 52 were released Jan. 20, 1981.

Progress Seen in Soviet-Chinese Talks

MOSCOW (AFP) — The Soviet Union and China are ready to extend bilateral cooperation to economic, trade, scientific, technical, cultural and other fields, despite political differences between the two countries, according to an official Soviet communique released Friday.

The communique was issued by Tass following the fifth round of Chinese-Soviet normalization talks, held recently in Beijing. It called the talks "useful" and said the talks, held at six-month intervals, would resume in April 1985 in Moscow.

Diplomatic sources noted that there was no mention of progress on the fundamental differences that have blocked normalization of bilatera relations. Beijing considers these obstacles to be the presence of Sovjet troops near China's borders, the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and Soviet support for Vietnamese action in Cambodia. Moscow has said it cannot negotiate understandings that might be detrimental to Vietnam or Afghanistan.

Reagan, Mondale Both Weave Myths About President's Record in Office

By David Hoffman

; Washineton Past Service WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan and Walter F. Mondale have spun a series of conflicting myths about Mr. Reagan's record in their battle for the White House, each painting sweeping, symbolic portraits that greatly mis-state or oversimplify the complex reality of what Mr. Reagan has done since 1981.

This year's campaign myths, knitted out of exaggeration and omission, have largely focused on the Reagan domestic policy record: one that the president hails as a forward-looking "revolution" and which Mr. Mondale decries as an 'unfair" step backward.

At times, both candidates try to perpetuate the same myths, but for different reasons.

For example, Mr. Reagan has portrayed himself as a champion of fiscal restraint, a notion that Mr. Mondale reinforces when he complains about unfair budget cuts in social programs. In reality, what Mr. Reagan ac-complished was a shift in budget priorities, not an overall reduction. in fact, U.S. government spending in his term reached a bigger share of the gross national product — the total value of the nation's goods and services — than at any time since World War II. Both Mr. Mondale and Mr. Reagan have perpetuated the myth that the Reagan tax cuts were extraordinary. But the reality is that Mr. Reagan's across-the-board tax cut was a historical correction that only brought tax burdens back to the levels just before the big inflationary spurt of the late 1970s, and Mr. Reagan then took back about one-third of his original tax cut in later tax increases.

. Mr. Reagan insists that the huge federal deficits can be easily melted away by a combination of economic growth and further spending cuts. But his own senior analysts; and most of those outside the gov-erament who have looked at the problem, say this is impossible. If re-elected, Mr. Reagan will face hard fiscal realities that bear no resemblance to the easy solutions sues that Mr. Reagan put at center he has described in the campaign. Mr. Mondale perpetuates the myth that Mr. Reagan's defense build-up is excessive and can be reduced. But the reality is that lower inflation and congressional cul-backs have trimmed the Reagan defense budget to levels that are not much higher than what Presi-dent Jimmy Carter projected in his final year in office, when Mr. Mondale was vice president

Mr. Reagan also fosters the myth that he wants government to be less intrusive in people's lives. But the reality is that while he follows this principle on economie issues, be has abandoned it on many social and moral issues.

For example, Mr. Reagan signed a bill forcing states to raise their drinking age or lose some federal highway aid, a direct use of federal intervention. He fought for and signed legislation in which the government forces high schools receiving federal mooey to open their facilities to religious as well as nonreligious groups. He also has advocated injecting the government into such religious and moral issues as abortion and prayer in schools. center on the tax and spending isstage from his first day in the presidency.

Mr. Reagan fosters the myth that he has reduced the budget, telling audiences that he trimmed the rate of growth in government spending from 17 percent to 6 percent and declariog that he intends to further reduce spending as a share of gross national product.

But Mr. Reagan also tries to make spending a virtue when he wants to refute allegations that be has burt the poor. We can show that io every instance and in every program we are spending more money and helping more people than ever before in our history," be says. And, he insists, it is "just not true" that "we have been trying to balance the budget on the backs of the needy."

He does not point out that spending on programs for the needy would be less if Congress had given him cuts be sought.

Mr. Mondale has complained about the unfairness of these do-mestic hudget cuts, from Social Security to education and job-training programs. But Mr. Mondale's own budget plan includes only a selective restoration of such cuts, and suggests he would follow a general path of fiscal restraint -- with different priorities than Mr. Reabortion and prayer in schools.

CAMPAIGN BRIEFS

Powerful Post for Quiet Congressman

JEFFERSONVILLE, Indiana (LAT) - Barring an election upset, one of the least-known members of Congress will soon be one of the most powerful: Representative Lee F. Hamilton, a tacitum Indiana Democrat, is in line to become chairman of the House intelligence committee.

Mr. Hamilton, who has cultivated a low profile during his 20 years in Congress, will become only the second chairman of the intelligence committee since its creation six years ago. He has prepared an ambitious agenda. It includes reviews of presidentially ordered covert activities around the world, which have ranged from supporting rebels in Nicaragua to financing moderate politicians in Africa.

The Democrat-controlled House committee, which has seemed more determined to play its watchdog role recently than has its Republican-led Seoate counterpart, will also "look into the quality and cost-effectiveness of the intelligence product," Mr. Hamilton said. The nation's intelligence budget, which is secret, reportedly is about $10 billion a year.

LaRouche Must Pay NBC $3.2 Million

WASHINGTON (WP) — A federal court jury in Alexandria, Virginia, has awarded $3.2 million to NBC Television in a suit against Lyndon H. LaRouche Jr., an independent presidential candidate. The suit was filed after Mr. LaRouche sued the network for libel.

Earlier Thursday, the U.S. District Court jury rejected Mr. LaRouche's $150-million libel suit against the network. Jurors found that there was no evidence that network broadcasts, which charged that Mr. LaRouche and his followers engaged in smear campigns and threatened to kill President Jimmy Carter, were false.

NBC's countersuit, in which the jury made the award, was based on a claim that Mr. LaRouche's followers impersonated NBC reporters while attempting to sabotage a scheduled interview with Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, Democrat of New York.

[The CIA acknowledged Thursday that Mr. LaRouche, 62, an ultra-conservative politician who will be listed on presidential ballots in 18 states, had met with top CIA officials, apparently on matters of national security, United Press International reported. The comments followed a report to that effect in The New Republic magazine.]

Regan May Urge End to Deductions By Martha M. Hamilton

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — Treasury

Secretary Donald T. Regan, developing a second-term tax proposal for consideration by President Ronald Reagan, has tentatively ap-proved phasing out the income-tax deduction for state and local taxes, including property taxes, and taxing all unemployment compensation and workman's compensation, according to a source.

Such a move would be controversial, particularly for lowand moderate-income taxpayers who are allowed to exclude unemployment and workman's compensation benefits from taxation. All homeowners would lose their property-tax deduction, and individuals who live in states with relatively high state income taxes be particularly hurt by the loss of deductions for those taxes. President Reagan, who is under attack on the tax issue by Democrats, has promised not to use tax reform as a guise for raising taxes. The Democratic presidential nomince, Walter F. Mondale, has charged that Mr. Reagan, if reelected, has a secret plan to raise In his State of the Union address, President Reagan asked the Treasury Department for a tax proposal taking into account the need for fairness and economic efficiency. He asked that it be delivered after Tuesday's election. Treasury officials have talked frequently of the need to broaden the tax base as part of a new tax tions. But major decisions influencing the ultimate shape of the proposal remain to be made, the source said The officials have said they are ning toward a proposal to sim-posals are among dozens of opplify taxes that would lower income tax rates as the base is broadened by the elimination of deductions and exclusions. Alfred H. Kingon, assistant treasury secretary for policy and public affairs, refused Thursday to comment on any specific change that might be under consideration as part of the Treasury proposal. He emphasized that every option must meet several tests, including fairness and economic efficiency as well as how well it fits into the overall package of measures to be recommended.

Doing More for Ethiopia

A sharp little political dispute bas broken out over whether the Reagan administration has moved smartly enough to meet the tremendous famine in Ethiopia. The answer is that the United States has not done as much as it might if Ethiopia were still a friendly country, but it has done much more than it would have if it were doling out aid by strictly political criteria. It is an unlikely subject for Americans to be arguing over in an election campaign, but the dispute will have been useful if it generates further help for those in need.

And Ethiopians, and many other Africans, are in need. Hundreds, perbaps thousands, are starving weekly, and millions are threatened in what is described as a crisis of historic proportions. It is terrible. The relief that Western donors now send to Ethiopia can have a lifeor-death effect for very great numbers of human beings in distress.

The unfortunate fact remains that it is simply not within the power of these donors to spare Ethiopia the brunt of its government's own decisions over the last 10 years. Growing more food and assuring its proper distribution have not been high priorities for Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam. He has had other things on his mind: consolidating his power, making his country the first in Africa to be ruled by a Communist Party, increasing the strength of his army, and putting down insurgencies in was toppled from power partly by the political and social effects of a famine in 1973-74, one for which his policies also had a responsibility. This may account for some of Colonel Mengistu's slowness to acknowledge that his government is presiding over a national catastropbe

The weather has been bad, but official policies depressing agriculture have also been bad. The colonel has deliberately denied food to people starving in secessionist areas, notwith-standing the effort of the international agencies to pry relief in. In socialist Ethiopia, those who are starving are at the bottom of the power pyramid and have no one to represent them at the top.

Americans have no basis to claim they have done enough by Ethiopia. But the Soviet Union has been the direct sponsor of the Ethiopian policies that have aggravated the buman and economic costs of the famine. Heat should be put on the Kremlin, which has behaved recklessly and cynically in this simu-tion. It is only now beginning to provide a modicum of relief for the client whose welfare it professes to care about. Still, there is more that this country can do - and it should.

The Saudis and OPEC

Running a cartel is no bed of roses. It sounds simple in theory: You only have to hold down production in order to hold up prices. But how does it work in practice? Ask the Saudis about oil and OPEC.

There has been widespread cheating among members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries on production ceilings, a common failing in cartels. The Saudis underestimated the success with which their customers in the industrial world would conserve energy and cut oil imports. When Saudi Arabia forced the rest of OPEC to follow it in lowering prices from $34 a barrel to $29 in early 1983, a tacit promise was made: Saudi Arabia was to absorb any further production cuts necessary to enforce the new price. But the necessary cuts have turned out to be far larger than anyone expected 21 months ago.

Even with a strong recovery of the American economy, world oil consumption is running mueb lower than most forecasts indicated. The failure of the annual stock-building surge to appear this year was the immediate cause of the price cuts of the past several weeks. And those cuts in turn were the reason for OPEC's anxious meeting this past week in Geneva.

OPEC's policy and power come down essentially to Saudi Arabian policy and power. The Saudis have generally succeeded, over time, in imposing their purposes on their partners. In feared that the oil radicals, with their extremely high prices, would wreck the market for oil, and they played the moderate in pushing prices down — moderately. Now Saudi Arabia and its smaller neighbors along the west side of the Gulf are to absorb nearly two thirds of the production cuts on which OPEC has agreed.

The Saudis, capable of producing more than 10 million barrels of oil a day, have been able to reduce the actual flow to about 4 million barrels a day with no signs of financial strain. The question now is how much further down they can, or will, go to prevent any additional erosion of prices for world oil producers from Indonesia to Texas. If the Saudis can get the production of OPEC's 13 member countries down to the 16 million barrels a day they now promise, and then hold it there, they will certainly keep prices from falling further and might even raise them.

But Americans, and OPEC's other customers, are not without resources of their own. They have the weapon with which any customer can retaliate against overpricing. They can conserve further and buy less. If they do it effectively, OPEC's sales will drop again, and the cartel will have to hold another emergency meeting. The industrial countries are on the right track; their conservation is paying off.

Other Opinion

America Studies the Choices

Most people, excluding the 12 percent or so of the population below the poverty level, are better off today than when the Reagan administration took office.

- The Albuquerque (New Mexico) Journal.

Reagan is not Roosevelt. In neither eloquence nor the stamp of historic greatness does he yet compare to FDR. But if he does not have the fullest measure of magnetic leadership, he has quite a lot of it. And the lamentable fact is that his opponent, Walter Mon-dale, has almost none of it. The vast majority of the American public recognizes, quite obvi-ously, the Democratic candidate's pathetic lack of the power to inspire.

- The San Francisco Examiner.

By a small margin, but in our view a clear one, the scales tip against the president. Our hopes for Mr. Mondale are greater than those for Mr. Reagan. Our fears about Mr. Reagan are greater than those about Mr. Mondale. — The Minneupolis Star and Tribune.

The principal hope for the Democratie nominees is for a stirring, so far undetected in the poils, at the grass roots — a rumbling recognition that the policies of the Reagan administration are laden with peril for the economy and the threat of a nuclear holocaust.

- The Arkansus Gazette (Little Rock). Ronald Reagan has not taken government off the backs of the people but he bas lightened the load through tax curs. He can genuinely claim much of the credit for the current economic recovery. For many voters, it is enough that for the first time since John Kennedy an American president has made people feel good about themselves and their country. — The Clarion-Ledger (Jackson, Miss.).

The challenger is more thoughtful, decisive and knowledgeable about foreign and domestie affairs. And he is more experienced in the practical workings of government.

Gandhi on the Superpowers

We have a treaty of friendship and coopera-tion with the Soviet Union that has no military implication whatsoever. It does not represent an alternative to nonalignment. It does not exclude friendship with the great powers and with countries of the two bloes. One friendship must not be at the cost of another. We are, in fact, seeking friendship with the West. We want friendship with the United States, but unfortunately, sectors of the security establisbment of that country think that India is not relevant to the global U.S. strategy.

— Indira Gandhi, in an interview published Wednesday by Corriere della Sera (Milan).

. . . and a Neighbor on Gandhi

So long as she was alive, we were assured of her restraining influence. She respected our sovereignty and was too mature to lead any adventure across the Palk strait. The un-certainties that rush upon the Indian scene now could have nerve-testing implications for Sri Lanka. We share India's sorrows and, in many ways, her loss.

The Threats to Indian Unity: Will the Nation Survive?

WASHINGTON — Will India break up in the aftermath of the assassination of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi?

Ironically, the dangers to the unity of the vast and diverse Indian subcontinent might have been greater if she had lived. Beneath the sense of horrified shock and grief now sweeping In-dia, there are signs of a sad recognition that her strategy of personal political survival had increasingly led her to pursue policies damaging to India's long-term stability. When Mrs. Gandhi took over from her father, Jawaharlal Nehru, she surprised many observers by proving to be a tough, cunning, commanding politician. For the first decade after his death she provided effective national leadership, relying on the inheritance of a strong Congress Party organization.

But she lacked Nehm's stature and charisma.

She did not have his capacity to inspire deep emotional responses in India's masses and thus did not have the tight grip over the political bosses on whom his power had rested. Above all, she lacked the sensitivity and skill as a conciliator that had enabled Nehru to balance the interests of India's contending religious and regional forces and to retain the loyalty of warring Congress chieftains.

ually, as she began to lose her grip, Mrs. Gandhi responded with reckless, vindictive po-litical maneuvers against adversaries in her own party, as well as in the opposition, which led to steadily growing isolation from many of ber erstwhile lieutenants. She might well have lost her parliamentary majority in the elections scheduled for next January or, in any event, received a perilously thin mandate.

More important, she departed from Nehru's cardinal principles in dealing with religious and regional minorities. In place of Nehru's painstaking care to avoid a collision with the Sikhs and to reassure Moslems of a fair deal in Mind deminded accepts. a Hindu-dominated society, Mrs. Gandhi in-creasingly identified herself with Hindu conser-vative elements in a blatant bid to win their political support.

In the case of the Sikhs, terrorist extremisis forced her hand; she had no choice in the end but to send the army into the Golden Temple. But ber hard line toward the power-sharing demands of relatively moderate Sikh leaders during the past three years led to a crisis that might well have been averted or moderated.

Nehru scrupulously avoided siding with the north Indian Hindi-language majority belt in its effort to dominate non-Hindi south India and West Bengal. By contrast, Mrs. Gandhi progressively [el] back on overt appeals to her north Indian political base, feeding the flames of north-south tension.

To be sure, Rajiv Gandhi is inexperienced and starts out with even less stature than Mrs. Gandhi did when she was catapulted into the prime ministership in 1965. But it is precisely his lack of pretensions and his willingness to be included the bit dependent role at a broker. acknowledge his dependent role as a broker mediating between more powerful leaders that might enable him to play an effective stabilizing role, at least during a transition period.

His first big decision will be whether to proceed with the parliamentary elections due by Jan. 5 under the constitution, or to postpone by Jan. 5 under the constitution, or to postpone them by declaring national emergency rule. A decision to put off the elections would be a danger signal, revealing a lack of confidence on his part and inviting a political polarization between the government and the opposition.

Another grave threat facing India is that militant Hindu elements, blaming all Sikhs for the murder of Mrs. Gandhi by Sikh security guards, will continue to unleash mob violence. The prospect of growing army involvement in suppressing such violence could intensify serious tensions within Indian military ranks between Sikh and Hindu officers, as well as ranktween Sikh and Hindu officers, as well as rankand-file members of the armed forces.

India's greatest asset is its functioning parliamentary system, based on a popularly accepted constitution. The vitality of this system explains why India has retained remarkable political cohesion since 1947, in marked contrast to the sorry example of many other Third World states wracked by successive military coups.

As the unifying memories of the Congress-led struggle for independence recede, the Indi-an party system may continue to fragment, making it more difficult for Indian leaders to govern with a stable parliamentary majority. But India has acquired new underpinnings of economic unity as a result of dramatic strides in industrialization. With the night leavest indusindustrialization. With the ninth-largest industrial economy in the world, the Indian subconti-nent is increasingly knit together by a national market, as well as by national communications and transportation networks.

Many of the separatist pressures from aggreed religious and regional interest groups are actually bargaining pressures within the system designed to get the biggest possible share of a growing national pie. This has been apparent during the deliherations of a national commission currently studying constitutional reforms in the relations between New Delhi and the states. Pressures are likely to build up for a new federal structure in which the central government makes major concessions to regional demands for greater automomy and for more economic control over both taxation and the economic control over both taxation and the allocation of development expenditures.

The non-Hindi regions and the Sikhs in the Punjab are also seeking a new pattern of political coexistence. New Delhi would permit locally based opposition forces to rule in the states inexchange for a cooperative approach on their part toward coalinon-building in the national Parliament. In resisting this type of power-sharing compromise and seeking to perpetuate single-party rule throughout the country, Mrs. Gandhi came into her angry collision with the Sikhs, precipitating the bloody showdown that culminated in her murder.

The writer, a former New Delhi bureau chief for The Washington Post, is with the Carnegie! Endowment for International Peace. His books include "India: The Most Dangerous Decades."

Reagan's Proud Image: It Isn't Quite Enough

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON - There are good reasons to respect the views of the millions of Americans a majority in all the polls — who are inclined to re-elect Ronald Reagan as president of the United States.
Think back to August of 1981, when Mr. Resgan signed in to law a head of state, performing an imporseries of measures carrying out the main pledges of his 1980 campaign—a bill reducing tax rates by 25 percent and permanently indexing them

The specially since his time against inflation, and a budget measure drastically slowing the growth of the welfare state and shifting most of those savings to an expansion of the nation's military strength.

Those two measures were at the heart of Mr. Reagan's 1980 campaign. Whether one supported them or not, no one could miss the point that after four failed presidencies, America desperately needed his demonstration of effective leadership.

Think back to October 1983, when 241 marines were blown up in their Beirut barracks and U.S. forces went ashore in Grenada. Much is said both admiringly and mockingly— about the speaking and acting ability of The Great Communicator. But during that week, Mr. Reagan put his talent to work to provide national leadership of a very high order.

the Grenada military mission, polarized the public in a bitter, finger-pointing debate. But with his brilliant television speech and his masterful role-playing at the memorial ceremonies bonoring the casualties, Mr. Reagan belped Americans deal with their grief and shock, discharge their emotions, and discuss the policy questions without rancor.

In those two instances, among others. Mr. Reagan was fully presidential —in both the ceremonial and the substantive sense. In 1981, be was head of a government that knew its policy and moved both Congress and country to endorse it. In 1983, he was in office has seen a seeming cure of the disease of inflation, which had become the scourge of family budgets and the source of the national mal-aise of which his predecessor spoke. In celebrating the lifting of that gloom and the rebirth of national optimism, Mr. Reagan's campaign has blunted the Democrats' efforts to shift the 1984 election onto any other grounds. Republicans have set up Nov. 6 as a national "Thank you, Mr.

But it must be more than that. It must also be a day of appraising the larger dimensions of presidential performance — now and for the next four years. And Mr. Reagan's perfor-mance, even in its high points, raises questions that this campaign has not bethered to appear to the company of the bothered to answer.

If the willingness and ability to act The terrorist murder of the ma-rines could easily have transmatized—skip, for example, then another is the country and in combination with—surely the judgment to calculate the consequences of a policy choice. The tax-and-budget measures passed in 1981 have been followed serially by the longest and worst recession in 50 years and, now, one of the bealthiest, sustained periods of noninflationary growth in the postwar period. For partisan purposes, Republiremains as president.

The reality is less comforting. The prosperity most Americans enjoy has been purchased in part by greater economic inequality and greater poverty for millions of our fellow-citizens. It has been procured, to a greater extent, by borrowing against the future estuines of the next generaenormous, unprecedented debt that is fueling Americans' spending spree.

Both the deficits and the inequities were predicted when Mr. Reagan's plan was passed. But he denied them and - what is more worrisome denies them still, even after they have occurred. That degree of obtuseness

U.S. Pressure, Sandinist Quarrels Make Nicaragua's Vote a Travesty

N EW YORK — A fatal combina-tion of U.S. intransigence and conflicts within the Sandinist leadership have turned the Nicaraguan elections, scheduled for Sunday, into a travesty of what they might have been. This was a unique opportunity for a Third World revolution to gain legitimacy in the eyes of the world. Instead, the Sandinists have seen their electoral experiment crumble.

The Reagan administration has studied the weaknesses of leftist regimes under pressure to great effect. Its cruel and costly war has brought Nicaragua close to economic ruin, infected the country with a siege mentality and blurred the lines between legitimate dissent and counterrevolution. Washington has set n cynical trap, and the Sandinists - angry, paranoid and inexperienced have fallen in.

The Sandinists are also victims of their own divisions. While some of their leaders have been pragmatic enough to recognize the wisdom of holding elections, others, less flexible, have undermined any chance that those elections could succeed. Two clearly discernible tendencies have emerged within the nino-man national directorate. On one side are the "pragmatists." Head of state Daniel Ortega Saavedra is one hardly surprising, for he is exposed to the realities of international diplomacy. The agriculture minister, Jaime Wheelock, who must work with the agrarian private sector, is another.

By George Black

An opposing set of views holds that only military strength, internal security and mass mobilization around a "correct" propaganda line can guarantee the survival of the revolution. Among these ideologues are the interior minister, Tomas Borge Martinez, the party chief, Bayardo Arce Castano, and the defense minister, Humberto Ortega Saave Ira. The diplomatic influence of Nicaragua's friends in the Socialist International and the Contadora countries Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela — reinforced the pragma-tists. The directorate agreed to hold multiparty elections and chose Daniel Ortega — not his radical eballeng-er Tomas Borge — as the Sandinist candidate. Ronald Reagan's charge that the Sandinists designed the election as a "Soviet-style sham" is malicious and inaccurate.

The directorate acknowledged a blunt reality: that those Latin American and other nations who paid Nicaragua's bills, and provided a diplomatic wall against the worst impulses of the Reagan administration, had a right to demand that Nicaragua respect, or at least approximate, Western democratic norms. Soviet unwillingness to underwrite the revolution was probably an important reason for the pragmatists' victory. So what went wrong? Things began to go off track when talks about the conditions under which the leading. opposition candidate, Arturo José Cruz, would participate, broke down over the issue of whether to postpone the balloting. Members of Mr. Cruz's coalition, the Democratic Coordina. tor, now acknowledge that they were, under pressure from the Central In-telligence Agency to find a pretext for, abstention, the Sandinist negotiator, Bayardo Arce, perhaps the most orthodox of the commandantes, pulled, ont just when an agreement appeared to be within reach. The irony is that the Sandinists surely have enough, popular backing to win an election — by any rules and under any timetable that their opponents could devise.

Can cool-headed pragmatism stillprevail among the Sandinists? They have made an enormous expenditure of time and political capital for very little return. They are left with the narrowest of margins for maneuver and none for error.

The elections in their present form are in effect a referendum on the Sandinist program. Nicaraguan voters may be happy with this, but it is unlikely to keep the harsh outside world off their backs for very long. The Reagan administration will take the election of Daniel Ortega as one more reason to turn the screws on Nicaragua, And that in turn will only vindicate the more dogmatic mem bers of the directorate

BRUSSELS — Solidarity now has its first acknowledged martyr. The Reverend Jerzy Popietuszko's assassination by a death squad from the Interior Ministry may be the first phase of the most serious crisis Poland has known since martial law was proclaimed in December 1981.

Father Popieluszko, 37, was the chaplain of the outlawed Solidarity trade union. He led the list of 69 churchmen accused by the regime of abusing priestly privileges. He was also one of the most popular people in Poland. His murder presents disturbing aspects for the laruzelski regime. It is now elear that not only does the regime not control the nation, but it cannot even keep its own forces in check.

It also is a setback in the eyes of Western powers that were prepared to recognize the re-gime's authority. Lech Walesa, Solidarity's former leader, sized up the situation when he said: "Someone played us all — from the prime minis-ter to the man in the street — a very dirty trick." What Mr. Walesa cannut say is that the regime of that same prime minister is responsible for the rise of fascism in Poland and for the creation of death squads within the police, the army and the Communist Party. The gang that kidnapped the freedom of the nation in 1981 owes its success to the forces of repression, above all to the police. These forces have offered their loyalty in return for material advantages, immunity, and other benefits only the regime can provide. The ruling clique still bears the stigmata of the original sin: the violation of the Gdansk agreements that proclaimed the existence of Solidarity and created a zone of freedom within a Communist state. The abolition of this Magna Carta put great power in the hands of the most reactionary elements of the nation. It is absurd to believe that the commando that killed the priest acted alone. The three men have

Poland's Dangerous New Era of Political Terrorism

apparatus and protective godfathers at the top of Poland's pyramid of power. Father Popieluszko in of all these.

He had been fingered for the killers. The nation was subjected to a campaign of hatred against Solidarity and the courch, a campaign that singled him out. Interrogated by the police 14 times, the priest was accused in December 1983 of having a "clandestine spartment in town where a search turned up explosives, ammunition, thousands of tracts, a printing machine, illegal documents and tear gas grenade

A government spokesman recently called Fa-ther Popieluszko a "political fanatic, a Savonaro-la of socialism," and described his Masses as "sessions of collective bysteria and hatred against socialist Poland." In the Soviet Union, a month before the priest's assassination, he was numbered among the enemies of Polish socialism in a special article published by Izvestia. The priest's murder may reflect more than an episode of gang war among Poland's rulers, though it was that — witness the arrest Friday of two Interior Ministry colonels and the suspension of a general. It could also reflect a clan war within the Kremlin. This may explain the perplexity and consternation expressed by East European regimes. The Czechoslovak press, for example, was quick to declare that the killers of the priest were extremists in Solidarity's pay. At a time when accusations against the special services of East European regimes for having participated in the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II are becoming more credible. the murder of Father Popieluszko seems to add a Polish connection to the Bulgarian Soviet link in accomplices in the lower levels of the party the struggle against the influence of the church during interrogations in police stations or simply under "special circumstances." Father Popieluszko is Number 92 on this unhappy list. There may he more. International Herald Tribune.

Algeria Slowly Discards Part of Revolutionary Past

30 Years Later, Leaders Feel Pressure to Respond to Material Needs of Young Population

By Paul Lewis New York Times Service

ALGIERS — Thirty years after the start of Algeria's battle for independence from France, the country still shows signs of the commitment to socialism that its new leaders made when they took control and proclaimed Algeria "a beacon of African revolution."

The capital has a dilapidated air. Food and most other goods are scarce, and fruit juice is unobtainable in a country that was once France's orange grove.

A population explosion keeps the streets crowded with young people gazing at half-empty shops. Economic devel-opment continues at a frenzied but inefficient pace. Security

Yet beneath the surface, a process of change and relax-ation is under way. And as the government prepared for the 30th anniversary of the start of its fight for freedom, marked on Thursday, Algerian leaders said the celebrations were intended to show the world that Algeria has achieved matu-

"We are a constitutional democracy now," Mohammed Cherif Messaadia, secretary of the ruling party's central committee, said. "The institutions are in place. We are oo longer a revolutionary regime."

In the early hours of Nov. 1, 1954, armed members of an obscure Algerian nationalist organization called the Front de Liberation Nationale, attacked French police posts and a lead mine in the Aures Mountains of eastern Algeria. Six French citizens were killed. The French governor in Algiers dismissed the incidents as insubstantial. But the Algerian war of independence had begun. Seven years and nearly a million lives later. De Gaulle finally abandoned the attempt to keep Algeria French by force of arms. More than 800,000 French settlers who once regarded Algeria as home were repatriated and Africa's second largest country, with its rich oil and gas fields, was handed over to the FLN's radical and embittered leaders.

Another master fluist, JeanPierre Rampal, said in a 1979: "For my generation, he was king....He was really the first to imagine that a moving in Englance of the last 35 years teaching flute and woodwind classes in the United been influenced by his boyhood in States, Europe and Japan.

Chadli Benjedid overthrown by Colonel Boumedienne in 1965 and imprisoned until 1979, has been given a regular income and is welcome to return from self-exile in Europe, Mr. Messaadia said. Also welcome, he said, is Hocine Ait-Ahmed, another revolutionary leader, who escaped to Switzerland after being sentenced to death. The generation that won independence is growing older," Mr. Messaadia said. "It's time to forget past divisions."

Yet, as in many aspects of Algerian life, political passions engendered by the fight with France seem to limit the speed of change. More than 400,000 Algerians descended from those who fought on the French side in the war remain in France unable to return, their Algerian property confiscated. In other ways, too, the Chadli government is edging away from the austere revolutionary policies of its predecessors. Algerians no longer oeed exit visas to leave the country and the foreign exchange allowance for travelers has been in-

Housing and farmland seized from the departing French are being sold cheaply to private owners. Efforts are under ay to increase production of consumer goods, and private businessmen are being encouraged by the government.

Algeria's foreign policy also seems to be evolving in a more moderate direction. The country played a crucial role Moamer Qadhafi, the Libyan leader, in the region. Algeria has also relaxed its hostility to what it has called the reactionary government of King Hassan II of Morocco. This month, President François Mitterrand flew to Algeria to reassure Colonel Chadli about France's agreement with Libya to withdraw troops from Chad. The Algerians worry that this will leave Colonel Qadhafi free perhaps to stir up trouble in oeighboring Tunisia. Algeria's new gas pipeline to Italy crosses Tunisian soil.

Officially, Algeria says that "the page has been turned" in its relations with France. But France has been embarrassed.

by the Algerian decision to celebrate the start of a war in which 40,000 French soldiers and civilians died.

Despite criticism from the right and from organizations of former settlers. Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson attended the celebrations. Alluding in a recent television interview to France's continuing strong commercial ties with Algeria, he said, "We did oot choose the date, but can France afford to be absent?"

Officials often talk of the miseries of colonialism and attribute current difficulties to French neglect. "What do we have to unify us but the war and Islam?" Information Minister Bachir Rouis said.

On the other hand, the officials acknowledge that the driving force behind the government's more pragmatic ap-proach recently is the need to satisfy the material aspirations of the young people born after independence, now 60 per-cent of the population, and who do not share the ideals of those who won it.

Algeria's principal source of wealth is its oil and gas reserves. The country has maximized its income from them as world prices fell, but has had less success investing those revenues to create an economy able to employ its growing population when the oil and gas run out. The Soviet-style centralized economic planning and enormous investment in heavy industry favored by Algeria's early rulers are now recognized as mistakes.

The Chadli government has started making changes, cutting up the 60 to 70 bugh national industries founded during the Ben Bells and Boumedienne years into 400 smaller ones. Wages in government factories are being linked to output to encourage production, and the government is giving more support to the private sector in industry and farming. Foreign investment in partnership with the government has been legalized and top priority in the oew five-year development plan goes to agriculture and irrigation. But the pace of change remains slow, hampered by the revolutionary ideology of the leaders and an unwieldy bu-

Great ideas are like diamonds. In the beginning, they're hard to distinguish from the ordinary. However, with the right kind of skill, what seems ordinary can be fashioned into a brilliant reality. At Epson, we know how to select the kind of ideas that will produce products that people can trust. We approach every idea from the very beginning. We carefully evaluate its worth, and before proceeding any further, we examine its applicability. If we find any flaws, any imperfections, we stop. Most corporations can dream up ingenious product concepts. But what makes Epson different from everyone else is that we create products for people. Almost every single feature on an Epson product is designed to make your life easier. You'll never spend weeks trying to figure out how an Epson product works. And you'll never Intended as a tribute to the late Ralph Harari, from whose collecnon the paintings were bequeathed to the museum, and augmented by loans from the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, to which his son Michael Harari made gifts from the family collection, the exhibit is an excellent sampling of representa-tive Japanese painting of the last half of the 18th century and the first quarter of the 19th.

Edward Albee Stages Two of His One-Act Plays in Vienna

International Herald Tribune TIENNA - Edward Albee, twice winner

It happened on the stage of the English Theater on opening night. Due to Albee's careful selection of his players and his exact-ing direction the difficult transformation of actor-into-personage occurred in the riveting "Zoo Story."

TONDON - William Wordsworth wandering lonely as a cloud was oot, in fact, a cloud, but a man in a landscape. So were those determined hikers and sketchers, pad in hand, that he came to see as an integral part of the scenery around his home in Grasmere. Without them, and without what they recorded of it, the Lake District wouldn't be what it is in the English consciousness, a privileged scrap of peaks and fells where nature must be viewed through the prism of the human imagination. The Victoria and Albert Museum assembled a rich selection of all that has been left behind, on paper and on canvas, from 18th-century guidebooks and 19th-century architectural and flower drawings to icides seen through the prisms of very 20th-century cameras. "The Discovery of the Lake District," which runs through Jan. 24, is a provocative essay on a landscape and how people have interacted with it. It begins in the late 18th century, when English gentlemen educated in the classics began to cast about for a setting for their fantasies of a rural Arcadia. While Marie Antoinette Irolicked as a shepherdess in the Petit Trianon, they found an English setting that could compare worths' Dove Cottage, with its low ceilings; with the landscapes of antiquity, and with the Brantwood, where John Ruskin took refuge majesty of the Italian lakes and the alps that had from the borrors of modernity; and Hill Top. inspired such great European landscape painters as Claude and Poussin.

Washington Emerging As a Museum Mecca; Donors Are the Key

By Jo Ann Lewis

WASHINGTON - Washington has emerged as one of the greatest - and most agreeable - museum cities in the world.

"I've seen it happen," said the director of the National Gallery of Art. J. Carter Brown, 50. "I was a kid here in the '40s, when Washington was a sleepy Southern town filled with nothing but government bureaucrats. I bave to keep reminding people that until 1941 even the National Gallery didn't exist."

Joe Hirshhorn, founder of the Hirshhorn Museum — which didn't exist until 1974 - once recalled the Washington of his youth: "It was

No longer. In just over a decade, Washington has been transformed into an international museum mecca that in Mr. Brown's words "can hold its head up with any capital city in the world."

It is also fast becoming one of the most visited. Last year the various art, science and history museums that function under the umbrella of the Smithsonian Institution logged a record 25.8 million visits. The neighboring National Gallery — both the I.M. Pei wing and the newly renovated original building — clicked in 5 million

Partly supported by the U.S. government, most but not all of the Smithsonian museums are clustered along the Mall, a vast greensward that sweeps from the U.S. Capitol to the Washington and Lincoln Memorials, dotted with trees, plantings. Frishee players and food klosks. Within a few blocks, visitors can savor Chinese bronzes at the Freer, cubist sculpture at the Hirshhorn and paintings by Botticelli and Leonardo at the National - not to mention the Hope Diamond and one of the world's biggest stuffed elephants.

No ancient, royal collections these. They were formed from private gifts by wealthy collectors whose hopes for immortality were pinned on contributions of both epic and modest proportions. The donors' names on the museums themselves reflect the polyglot nature of the United States, from Smithson the English aristocrat to Hirshhorn the

All have played a part in Washington's transformation. But the chief architect and generating force for change was the Smithsonian secretary S. Dillon Ripley, one of the most prolific builders and urban-character shapers since Baron Haussmann worked bis will on 19th-century Paris.

During his 20-year tenure (he retired last month), Mr. Ripley brought to life, or brought under the Smithsonian aegis, almost a dozen museums in new buildings or in old ones salvaged and renovated for the purpose.

After the dual opening in 1968 of the National Portrait Gallery and the National Museum of American Art (formerly the National Collection of Fine Arts) in the historic Patent Office Building, he launched the Renwick Gallery (for the exhibition of design and crafts] in 1972. Then for a much-needed national museum of modern art he garnered some 11,000 works (and several million dollars) from Mr.

In 1976, for the U.S. Bicentennial, came the National Museum of Air & Space, which now averages nearly a million visitors a month -(Continued on Next Page)

U.S. Collectors: Moving to Control the World?

NEW YORK - Is the United States about to take over the art market on a world scale? Dealers, museum curators and collectors in Europe are asking the question with some trepidation.

At the top, market professionals are in no doubt as to the buying power of the United States. In many categories, American collectors are those to whom the most expensive items are automatically offered first when they appear in the trade. They also tend to monopolize the best at auction If the talk is about monopolize the best at auction. If the talk is about impressionists and 20th-century masters, Americans play a leading role even though they do not enjoy the virtual monopoly here that they bold in some other categories.

Wendell Cherry of Louisville, Kentucky, acquired one of the greatest Degas seen at auctions in recent years, "Le Cafe Concert," sold as part of the Havemeyer Collection as Sotheby's in 1983 for $3.4 million, while "L'Attente," another pastel by Degas, was bought jointly by Norton Simon and the J. Paul Getty Museum for $3.74 million.

Where Old Masters are concerned, Norton Simon is probably the only living collector who can seriously claim to have formed a major collection within the last quarter of a century. While it is not comparable to the great public collections in Europe — such as the Uffizi in Florence, the Louvre in Paris, the National Gallery of London — the achievement is, nevertheless, remarkable, Mr. Simon cannot be blamed for not having acquired what is no longer available. He will never own anything like Simone Martini's 'Annunciation." Albrecht Altdorfer's "Battle of Alexander" or the great Vermeers and Leonardos, all pinned down in museums. But be did the next best. He cornered the two or three indisputable masterpieces that strayed into the auction room and a few more negotiated in the trade.

When an extraordinary "Resurrection" on canvas by Dierick Bouts — which closely matches another scene, also on canvas (an unusual technique for the 15th century) in the National Gallery - came up at Sotheby's in 1980, he did not miss out. For £1.87 million the Flemish gem became his. At that time, the National Gallery, whose own Bouts does not equal Simon's for sbeer beauty, did not but an eyelash, in contrast to the furor caused in recent months by American purchases of British-owned art.

Four years later, Mr. Simon made a comparable coup — or, to be accurate, he shared it with the Getty Museum because, the rumor went in professional circles, be did not quite bave the cash. This concerned one of the most beautiful pictures ever done by the 17th-century French master Nicolas Poussin, which was sent for sale to Christie's by the Duke of Devonshire. The Poussin, which was at Chatsworth House for more than two centuries, is one of the very few that has retained its sfurnato effects — the delicate surface yellowing devised by the Old Masters to tone down certain colors.

American aquisition: "The Resurrection' by Dieric Bouts was purchased by the Norton Simon Museum in 1980.

sale for only £1.6 million.

Regarding Old Master drawings, the role played by Americans was dramatically highlighted last July at a

At the time, the Poussin caused so little excitment in Europe that it was bought in at a trifle less than its reserve price. It had to be negotiated at the end of the knocked down to the Getty Museum, while the dean of American collectors, Ian Woodner, bought for £3.2 million a sheet from the Vasari Album. While American interest in Old Master drawings goes back to the turn of the century, it has asserted itself with unprecedented vigor in the last six years. It first became apparent at the Von Hirsch sale in 1978. It intensified at the Harvany auction at Christie's two years later, when a magnificent Rembrandt pen and sepia wash study for "Joseph Recounting His Dream" went to Mr. Woodner, who was bidding against a New

Other American purchases that were known only to professionals got less publicity. These included three Andrea Mantegna drawings, acquired by Agnew's of London on behalf of an American collector, with Mr. Woodner as the underbidder.

A new generation of collectors has sprung up. John R. Gaines, from Lexington, Kentucky — started collecting Old Master drawings about 12 years ago. At the Chatsworth sale, he bought a study by Frederico Barocci for £172,800, a superb view of a harbor by Jacques Callot for £118,800, a Rembrandt landscape in sepia and brown ink for £518,400, a remarkable virgin and child in red chalk by Parmigianino for £167,155, and a Van Dyck study of saints for

The American predominance is even stronger, if barely publicized, in more rarefied areas. In the last decade, the most powerful buyer of Indian sculpture was probably the late John D. Rockefeller 3d, who left his collection to Asia House in New York. The importance of American collecting attracted to the United States dealers such as Herbert Kahane -now back in his native Zurich — or Navin Kumar, who left his native Delhi to open a gallery in New York. While the Rockefellers of this world go after large-size pieces bought at huge prices, the United States can also boast collectors whose sophisticated knowledge is matched by equally sophisticated methods when buying. The ies of Jack Zimmerman, who is strong on Himalayan art, and William Wolfe, who specializes in Southeast Asia, both from New York, of Tom Pritzker and James Alsdorf from Chicago, who go in for sculpture, of John Ford of Baltimore, who is "very spread out" as his fellow connoisseurs put it, are familiar to the inner circle of high-powered collectors and dealers even if they never appear in print.

Samuel Eilenberg, a university professor of mathematics, is probably one of the three or four greatest connoisseurs of early Indian and South Asian bronzes from Kashmir to Cambodia. He is also described in the trade as one of the shrewdest and toughest of buyers. Through the Eilenbergs of the collecting world, the U.S impact on the art market has taken a new dimension. It does not just affect the $200,000-plus category. It now makes a dent in areas where knowledge and flair, as much as money, are essential weapons.

Perhaps the most striking illustration of the new wer of American collecting in the field is provided by two current exhibitions. Steve Kossack's collection is now displayed at the Metropolitan Museum under the title "The Lotus and the Flame," through March 3, (Continued on Page 9)

Memorabilia From American Campaigns: Tippecanoe, Lincoln and Jackson, Too

By Rita Reif

NEW YORK - How much longer will political campaign memorabilia be collected? It's a question raised every four years during presidential campaigns — and one that so far has not been answered. The problem is that the popularity of the period material increases with every presidential election, but the production

Yet, collectors insist that there is no sign of diminishing enthusiasm. This year, as in the past, the pomp and parading that attend the electioneering process has focused attention on campaign items, spurring collectors to haunt flea markets and antique shows in search of rare "Tippecanoe and Tyler too" wares. Museums and galleries have mounted exhibitions documenting the history of such material and the great variety produced in almost 200 years.

One of the finest of such shows, "Packaging Presidents: Memorabilia From Campaign Yonkers through Nov 11. On view are more than 600 banners, buttons, posters and other campaign ephemera from the 19th and 20th centuries, selected by Frederick C. Voss, a campaign materials in print from the 1830s on.

historian of the Smithsonian Institution's He describes in detail the bitter contest waged National Portrait Gallery in Washington.

Mr. Voss and Rick Beard, the museum's associate director, point out in the show's 70-page catalog ($18.95), that one should not read too much into the messages delivered in campaign material. As Mr. Beard puts it in his foreword: "It is too much to argue, as some have, that the history of the presidency can be every presidential election, but the production of campaign mementos for today's candidates is on the wane. Eventually, some observers believe, this may cause a decline in popularity of such collectibles.

And the miscory of the presidency of the accretion of the memorabilia. He suggests however, that mementos from campaign pasts reveal certain recurring themes. And they do. Among the most obvious seen in this show are the popularity in campaigns of military heroes of the humble, log-cabin origins of candidates, as well as the controversial nature of the issues of slavery and the gold standard.

On view are major and lesser works from the collector. Merrill, C., Berman, a New York investor who is a partner in Berman. Kalmbach & Co. His holdings are described by the museum as "the finest private collection of presidential campaign art in the country." Mr. Voss, who also wrote the catalog, concurs. He relates how the earliest mementos, which were Pasts," is at the Hudson River Museum in tokens, were circulated by John Adams's supporters when he ran against Thomas

"I cut my teeth on campaign art." Mr. Berman said. He recalled that he began collecting campaign material in 1948, when he was 10. He shoveled snow in his Boston neighborhood and when he had $15 or $20, he said, he took the streetear downtown to bus tokens and buttons from coin dealers.

He toined the American Political Item Collectors' Society in 1952 and was introduced to the harter system popular at the time among buffs of such collectibles. "A large button was 10 cents, or maybe as much as 25. There was one item for which I paid $6.50, and one for which I paid the spectacular price of $15." He continued his pursuit of such items until he went to Harvard in the late 1450s.

By the time he returned to collecting campaign material 12 years later, in the early 1970s, everything about the field had change dramatically. When he joined the collecting society, he was its 96th member, and now it membership numbers thousands, he said. The material had soured in price, to 10 or a hundred times previous values. Among those most excited by the new activity level were Washington's private museums, for whom the Hirshborn and the National Gallery's east building in particular served as a catalysts. The Corcoran Gallery of Art, devoted to American art past and present, and the Phillips Collection, the first museum of modern art in the United States, were newly envigorated. Other line specialinterest collections, such as the Textile Museum and Dumbarton Oaks (Byzantine and pre-ian art), found increased interest and support.

All have helped generate a heady atmosphere in which artists, galleries and auction houses have been able to thrive, even after a major recession. A commercial building boom has also hrought new money — and acres of new walls — leading to a proliferation

There was another problem: The cost of many of these paintings had hecome quite prohibitive." So he sold his art collection and switched gears to refice his political campaign collection and to investigate 20th-century posters. ## U.S. Collectors: Moving to Control the World?

1985. "Light of Asia" is a traveling exhibition that started in the Los Angeles County Museum and opened in the Brooklyn Museum, New York, on November 1. The 179 pieces selected by Pratapaditya Pal, senior curator of Indian pieces selected by Pratapacitya Pai, senior curator of indian art at the L.A. County Museum, are largely drawn from private sources. Next week yet another exhibition in which Mr. Pal' is involved — he wrote the text for the lavishly illustrated book, "Indian Court Paintings" — will open at the Navin Kumar Gallery at 24 East 73d Street. This time the inspiration comes from the dealer, Mr. Kumar, but the main characters in the play are still those new American buyers million to unature into difficult artistic territory. willing to venture into difficult artistic territory.

Collectors of this type operate in several fields, from Chinese archaic art — witness the splendid collection of early ceramic sculpture formed by Ezekiel Schloss, to be sold at Sotheby's on December 3— to 18th-century English silver. They are little known and often keep a low profile. This is not just for security reasons. Like European collectors, they tend to think that, the more discreet they are, the greater their chances to be offered objects at reasonable prices by the trade. In the last 20 years or so they have drained substantial numbers of high-quality works of art in the middle price range — say the $10,000 to $100,000 bracket. Potentially, this new buying elite represents the most formidable threat to similar-minded European collectors, who had enjoyed a virtual monopoly until the early 1960s, before which time travel and communications were more difficult and access at the art supply, concentrated in Europe, was correspondingly restrained.

A very recent development could have a still greater impact on European art resources. The auction market has taken a new dimension in the United States, largely as a result of the fierce competition in which Sotheby's and Christie's are engaged. Sotheby's took over the nearly defunct Parke Bernet Galleries in 1966. Christie's followed Il years later in staging its first auction in New York. The troubled times through which Sotheby's went after Peter Wilson retired in 1980—followed by the dramatic takeover attempt by Marshall Cogan and Stephen Swid and the successful takeover by A. Alfred Taubman—paradoxically helped the auction business at large. Despite negative comments in the press, these developments focused attention on the two houses to the point where their activities came to be seen as general news items.

Sotheby's, which has fully recovered, has come under total U.S. control. Mr. Taubman is the owner and chairman. While he has expressed his intention to make sure that the auction house will retain its British character - its beadquarters remains in London - the U.S. touch is becoming more perceptible every day. The catalog has become more luxurious, the advertising more aggressive. Plans to "finance" vendors — to advance money on the proceeds of sales to be held — and even buyers, who can der certain conditions get loans to buy works of art from Sotheby's, have been made public. This could change the nature of the art market, and, in the middle term, make things very difficult for the competition.

In New York, the indispensable basis for any auction system - a large attendance - is widening daily. It is not just the international auctions that draw crowds. The more modest sales have become recognized attractions as well. Three years ago, James Lally, now executive vice president of Sotheby's North America, decided that there would be public viewings not just on Saturdays but also on Sundays. On one recent Sunday, Sotheby's first-floor showroom on York Avenue at 72d Street was packed with visitors who had come to view two sales of medium importance, one of 19thcentury paintings scheduled the following Friday, and one of English furniture to be held the next Saturday.

Christie's has felt the need for two auction bouses in New York. The bigger sales, such as the modern masters to be sold in mid-November, take place at 502 Park Avenue, next door to Delmonico's. Lesser sales, essentially of decorative works of art, are held at Christie's East, in what was once a garage. On a recent Saturday, the large exhibition room in which English pottery and porcelain, including Wedgwood, were displayed before a sale a few days later was as full of visitors as Drouot in Paris on a weekend. Auction-going appears to be becoming a widely popular pastime.

While Europe retains the built-in advantage of being the source of supply of the art of the Western past, there seems little doubt that New York is poised to become a dangerous competitor for London, which has been for the last decade or so the center of the world auction market. In the last two years New York has enjoyed an edge in overall financial value of works sold, chiefly major Old Master, modern and contemporary paintings. In the next few years it might acquire a comparable advantage in the middle range of the market, including objets d'art of every description. The center of the world art market could then seriously be argued to have shifted from the Old World to the New World.

A Window on World of Glass

By Vicky Elliott

PARIS - Transparence and substance, a liquid become a solid: Glass is a paradox whose origins are buried in the sands of ancient Egypt. In France, historically speaking, it has been used to inspire effect. from the stained glass of Chartres to the Hall of Mirrors in Versailles, but official acknowledgment of its uses in art and in industry begins only next year, with the opening of a new Centre du Verre, or glass center, at the Musée des Arts Décoratifs in Paris.

The center's collection of about 3,500 pieces, some of them dispersed in the museum's chronological displays and some to be housed in newly decorated premises on an airy upper level of the building on the Rue de Rivoli, has been ourtured and amplified by Yvonne Brunhammer, a curator of the museum since

She has built up the center's archives, which will be accessible to specialists and the interested public when the center opens in the spring, and she has established contacts all over the world, from Corning, the American glass empire, to the glassblowers of Murano in the Venice lagoon and the carvers of crystal in

From its everyday to its artistic uses, from the From its everyday to its artistic uses, from the alchemist's retort to the optical fibers of high technology, glass has a multifaceted history. At one stage, a French industrial group seemed willing to celebrate it, taking its cue from the Corning Glass Museum in upstate New York. "In the mid-1970s, there was talk of opening a glass museum at Fontainebleau, where the Saint-Gobain glassworks were." Miss Rounhammer said receotly. "but on one were," Miss Brunhammer said receotly, "but oo one was really interested."

The Musée des Arts Décoratifs has always had a fine collection of glass, dating from the Exposition of 1884, which featured the coruscating talents of the Art Nouveau master Emile Gallé. The intention of the museum from the beginning had been to follow both technical and artistic developments in the field. Slowly, good pieces representative of the satined surfaces of René Lalique, crystal from Daum and Baccarat, 19th-century extravagances of pressed and molded glass, Islamic and Far Eastern examples were Given the particular constraints of conserving glass, as opposed to design drawings, for example, or textiles wallpapers, a certain specialization already existed in the museum. But the impetus to create an autonomous glass center came when the Corning museum, in 1978, proposed that the Paris museum carry an exhibition called "New Glass" that had been successfully launched in New York,

"I suggested we enlarge the show to include contemporary French glassware," Miss Brunhammer recalled, "and they looked at me as much as to say, "What will she find?" In 1982, having chivied workshops around the country into action, she made her point in a major exhibition, rich with the work of French artists young and old. The exhibition proved. as Miss Bruchammer put it, that "French glass did

There was a wealth of carefully crafted pieces with inclusions of enamel, gold leaf and copper -from the Biot Glassworks, founded in the south of France in 1956 by Eloi Monod (who came to glass after a training in ceramics at the Manufacture de Sèvres). There were others who had come to glass through sculpture: the sand-blasted strata of the late Jutta Cuny, for instance. Then there were poetic pieces by Joël Linard and Michel Bouchard, and even crystal percussion instruments by the Baschet brothers, François and Bernard.

French art schools after World War II had failed, unlike their counterparts in other European countries. to include courses on glass, and for a long time there were no small-scale workshops in Fraoce. Traditionally, such masters as Maurice Marinot, much of whose archives were bequeathed to the Musée des Arts Décoratifs, bad been obliged to work with industrial establishments, for only they could afford to keep stoking the furnaces that kept the raw material for glass io its molten state.

But smaller workshops have slowly been taking root. Earlier this year, a course in the techniques of glassmaking began at the Fine Arts School in Aix-en-Provence as part of an initiative launched by the French Ministry of Culture. Miss Bruohammer said she hoped that, with encouragement of specialized exhibitions staged by the center, the pool of experience will deepen.

She is working on an exhibition for next year that will trace the development of the perfume flask, a subject that, appropriately, combines a revealing illustration of the cooperation of art and industry and a field in which France holds a virtual monopoly; a single factory on the Canal Saint-Martin in Paris produces a large percentage of the winged and faceted vials that hold some of the world's costliest fragrances.

Meanwhile, with a limited budget, Miss Brunhammer is having difficulty, as far as new acquisitions are concerned, in keeping up with the price of glass oo the art market. In the United States. glass has become so fashiooable that the feathery confections of such masters as Dale Chihuly fetch $10,000 to $40,000, while good examples of turn-ofthe-century work typically far exceed in price both ceramics and paintings of similar quality and age.

Miss Brunbammer has to admit that she understands the great appeal of art glass that makes it so costly. "There is still something incomprehensible and fascinating about glass, and the point at which it passes from one state to the other," she said, "It has something magical, something incorruptible and can form a rough idea of what is "important."

The exercise is more difficult but not bopeless with Old Master paintings: Stay clear of unsigned works, consider published pictures only and make sure that these are graced with the general consensus of present-day art historians. But it is unthinkable for Old Master drawings. Hardly any are signed. Catalogues raisonnés are few and far between, Collecting in this field requires the ability to form a judgment as to authenticity and, no less important, to assess the quality of draftmanship.

The growing role that Americans have been playing in this area during the last quarter of a century is the most telling indicator of the level of sophistication attained by U.S. collectors. Ian Woodner's achievement is probably the most impressive. An architect and real estate developer, Mr. Woodner, 79, is also a painter whose work has been exhibited in Paris and London. He has done some extraordinary landscapes on the fringes of abstraction.

His craft gives him an understanding of drawings that few collectors enjoy. It goes far beyond assessing authenticity. Only a performing musician will fully perceive the logic of a score and only a practicing draftsman can feel at his fingertips the purpose of linear structure.

There are three distinct periods in Mr. Woodner's life as a collector:

one as a buyer with modest means who occasionally laid hands on avantgarde drawings when no one else would consider them, another when he could afford to spend a few thousand dollars on a drawing, and the third when he became rich enough to go after masters such as Rembrandt.

The first drawing he bought was a Miró gouache, from Ted Schempp, a friend and a dealer for Nicolas de Staël. Mr. Woodner still remembers the price, although be bought the work in 1937: The Miró cost him $85. He later sold it.

His first Old Master drawing came to him considerably later. In 1953 he attended a sale at The Savoy, a now defunct New York auction house, where he bought a view of Padua by Tiepolo, in pen and brown ink with gray wash, for the then substantial price of $800. What he considers his first truly important acquisition was made years later. Until March 7. 1960, he had never spent more than $1,000 on a drawing. Then, however, he raised the stake to $20,000, the price that the New York dealer William Schab wanted for the bust of a young man, recently published in the catalogue raisonne of Mr. Woodner's collection as "attributed to Hans Holbein, the Younger.

Konrad Oberhuber of the Fogg Art Museum accepted the attribution, as did Paul Ganz in 1939, while James Byam Shaw, the great English expert, and Arthur Ewart Popham consider another version to be the original. In his latest assessment, Mr. Oberhuber cautiously warns that both could be copies of a lost version. Until the two drawings are put side by side "along with securely attributed portrait drawings by Holbein," as Mr. Oberhuber put it, no final resolution of the problem is possible. Several connoisseurs have yet to be convinced, but Mr. Woodner firmly believes that his is the original Holbein drawing. It is certainly a striking

This purchase was the first act of courage that led to his next important acquisition, again from Mr. Schab, in 1964. That year Mr. Woodner bought the figure of a satyr by the Renaissance sculpture and goldsmith Benvenuto Cellini. It is an extraordinary story as Mr. Woodner tells it.

The Cellini surfaced as an anonymous drawing in a London sale, where it was bought by the man Mr. Woodner calls the finest dealer in drawings in his generation, Hans Calmann. The London dealer kept it for almost two years, showing it to anybody whose opinion be thought worth considering. No one had a clue. One day, it occurred to him to ask a visiting Italian colleague to translate the four-line Italian inscription. Out came the words Fontana Belho - old Italian for the French royal city Fontainebleau. That clicked in Calmann's mind. Of the four Italian masters called in by the King of France to Fontainebleau, only Cellini was a sculptor. The inscription indicates, in the first-person singular, how the bronze figure for which the satyr is a study has been modified. It tallies with data in Cellini's diary. Therefore, the drawing has to be by Cellini, Mr. Calmann decided, a reasoning that has gained wide acceptance.

Mr. Schab wanted $18,000. Mr. Woodner, who did not have it, offered to give $5,000 in cash and the balance over the year. Mr. Schab agreed. So it was that the only large recognized Cellini outside the Louvre landed in Mr. Woodner's lap. "Why did you offer it to me and not to the Metropolitan Museum first?" Mr. Woodner inquired when the deal was concluded. Mr. Schab said: "I did. They had it for two days and they all liked it. They came back to me saying, "We will buy it from you. We would like a better price." That, I couldn't agree to."

The acquisition of the Cellini, arguably the rarest piece in Mr.

Woodner's collection, triggered a flutter of activity. He started buying at major auctions. In the 1978 Von Hirsch sale, Mr. Schab, acting as his agent, paid £72, 475 for a portrait of a young boy, a metalpoint with white lan Woodner, gouache of the Umbrian school, done in about 1490. Precise, subtle, it has been the object of much debate as to authorship — Sotheby's had it down as Pintorichio — which matters little — it is a forceful portrait by a great carriculure of an

In the same auction, Mr. Woodner also paid £40,140 for a study in pen and brown ink by the Florentine painter Fra Bartolommeo (c. 1474-1517), which has the sharp, clearly defined, swirling lines that recur in so many of Mr. Woodner's layorite huys.

On July 6, 1982, at Christie's in London, Mr. Woodner revealed to the full the bold independence of judgment typical of an artist who considers the achievement first. He acquired the head of a horse ascribed at the time to Raphael by one art historian and now widely recognized as such. He also went after the bust of a young boy in pen and greenish brown ink somewhat faded. Its authenticity was questioned by some. The mid-15th-century drawing has now been accepted by all the scholars who have examined it to say nothing of Christie's remarkable expert Noel

Last July, Mr. Woodner went all out: He bid at Christie's Chatsworth sale for a speet from the famous Vasari Album for £3.2 million, the second-highest price ever paid at auction for a drawing, after the £3.5-million Raphael head that was also bought at the Chatsworth sale.

Giorgio Vasari, Micbelangelo's friend and biographer, w.s an architect and artist. He was also the first collector of Old Master drawings in the and artist. He was also the first collector of Old Master drawings in the modern sense. He mounted them on large sheets, as he did the two draped figures attributed to Filippino Lippi on the sheet that Mr. Woodner bought, and occasionally arranged them in an architectural composition of his own, such as the trompe Foeil niches drawn on the verso. Few intact sheets from his Libro de Disegni, or Book of Drawings, have survived. Outbidding even the J. Paul Getty Museum, Mr. Woodner won a trophy that looks like a Renaissance mirror reflection of his three pursuits—architecture, painting, and the collecting of Old Masters. The sheet is awaiting an export license in England. It would somehow seem unfair if an artist passionately in love with the great masters that he studied for a an artist passionately in love with the great masters that he studied for a lifetime should be thwarted in his chase. True, Mr. Woodner would be

The great master drawings are perhaps not the best in Mr. Woodner's collection. Some were and remain gambles. But among the lesser known masters — from 16th- and 17th-century Italy in particular — his selection is dazzling. The traveling exhibition of his drawings organized by the Getty Museum, the Kimbell Museum in Fort Worth, Texas, and the National Gallery of Art in Washington early this year leaves no doubt

Underlying these diverse acquisitions is a deep feeling for the human face, matched by a sense of balance through movement and tension and, often, a sculptural quality that reminds one of the architect's instinct for

Not surprisingly. Mr. Woodner - who is first and foremost a lover of beauty, not a monomaniac — also buys sculptures. His collection of Cycladic marbles is one of the most important in private hands. It will provide a major contribution to an exhibition next year in the United States. It underlines Mr. Woodner's fundamental aesthetic concern, the earch for outline, structure and tension. The marbles are like drawings in proportions of the caninet, which was broader than first in adding of the Chinese lacquer panels and the way in which ormolu fittings were used to set off the black lacquer suggested the manner of the great cabinetmaker Adam Weisweiler whom the king and Marie Antoinette commissioned to do work for Versailles.

Not a trace of a cabinetmaker's mark could be detected. Luckily, Sotheby's cataloger found a document preserved in the French National Archives stating that on January 11, 1780, "a black cabinet the description of which exactly fits the present cabinet" had been delivered to Versailles at the cost of 7,200 livres (the French currency). The catalog noted certain differences - "the Spanish brocatelle marble top has since

Some green velvet on the inner face of the cabinet drop leaf has given way to leather. However, Sotheby's expert considered the other elements of description sufficiently precise to be conclusive. Two later references, including one in an inventory in 1787, led him to infer that this was the cabinet that once stood in the king's "cabinet interieur," or private study.

Finally, Sotheby's informed its readers that beneath one of the lacquer side panels sheets of lottery tickets dated 1781 were found. This was a tactful way of emphasizing that the anthenticity of the piece was beyoud dispute. The demonstration of the authorship and original destination, while entirely based on circumstancial evidence, was brilliant. If one or two leading dealers, inclined by experience to take scholarly essays with a pinch of salt, may have felt any doubts about the cogency of the arguments—the ormolu mounts did not elicit unrestricted enthusiasm—

Rich collectors or their advisers were convinced, starting with Barbara P. Johnson, when it was bid up to £1.035 million, establishing the world record for any piece of furniture. The Versailles curators, it is said, also

Five months later, another extraordinary price was paid in London, this time at Christie's. The object was a bureau plat, or writing desk, with Sevres porcelain plaque insets on all drawers, a device favored by Martin Carlin, whose mark was stamped on the desk. The burean plat had a wonderful pedigree. It had originally been acquired by the Grand Duke Paul, later Paul I of Russia, and his spouse, Maria Feodorovna, during a LONDON — Over the last 18 months, a string of phenomenal prices paid for French furniture has have led some 10 speculate that the very linest of Louis XV commodes and Louis XVI secretaires might eventually catch up with Old Masters.

A String of Record Prices for the Old Masters of Furniture

Last December it surfaced at Christie's once again and soared to

In Paris, at least one piece confirmed at about the same time that huge prices can be paid even for pieces that fall outside the recognized styles. This is an ebony bureau plat with heavy ormoln garlands hanging below the skirt. The massive but powerful piece is neoclassical and yet unlike any known Louis XVI piece of furniture of which it lacks, among other things, the dainty appearance. It is unmarked, but the key to the mystery is given by a portrait of the Due de Choiseul done by Van Loo in 1763. A corner of that desk, or of a perfect match to it, appears in the painting. We thus know that the first neoclassical furniture was designed in France long before the ascent to the throne of King Louis XVI, with which it is ususally associated

The bureau plat first surfaced at the Paris Biennale des Antiquaires Antique Dealers' Biennale — in 1978. Maurice Segoura, a leading dealer in 18th-century furniture and decorative art, sold it shortly after to a Lebanese collector, Anthony Tannouri, who was just beginning to buy 18th-century furniture. The price, Segoura told me, was "in the region of 2.6 million francs ($400,000 at that time)." In November 1983, the Tannouri collection was sold by order of a Paris court. This means that no reserve can be placed on the items by the vendor, and this tends to keep prices down. The auction conducted by Jacques Tajan at the Hotel George V was a clumsy affair. It started late, in sweltering heat. To make things worse, the auctioneer reversed the order of the catalog—spending a tedious 40 minutes selling some old rugs. As the porters presented them to millionaires sitting in the front row, they sent clouds of dust in their faces making the performance look like some old-fashioned Gallie farce. This could have killed the sale and, I suspect, it harmed it to some extent. Nevertheless, the bureau plat went up to 7.1 million francs, paid by the J. Paul Getty Museum.

More recently, there have been indications that more banal furniture of the 18th century can be made to soar sky-high over a very short period. A pair of Louis XVI crescent-shaped consoles in rather bad condition were bought by dealers at Drouot in the fall of 1983 for just over 400,000 francs. Duly restored and regilt, they turned up at Sotheby's in New York last May where they fetched $473,000. Professional sources say that two different private buyers had been advised to go after the items, which resulted in a head-on collision and the ensuing phenomenal price. The same vendors, according to the source, repeated their feat with a Louis XVI chair and resold it for a staggering $125,000. Even if circumstances were perhaps peculiar, the fact remains that no one forced the buyers to

There is a growing fascination with 18th-century furniture after a long period of neglect. Part of the reason lies in the awareness that furniture is one of the areas where truly major works of the past are still available. Unexpected discoveries are more likely than in most other fields. It is the most elaborate and refined furniture that has been going up because it is sought by people who buy it as collector's items rather than as decorative props - even if the collectors fit their pieces into a setting. The Versailles secrétaire described as having been commissioned for the king's study and the bureau plat are typical examples of the pieces that can be expected to fetch huge prices and soar further still in the short term. They are surrounded by an aura of history, indisputable in the second and brilliantly argued in the former. Such an aura gives each one of them a unique quality that goes beyond aesthetics.

It has the added advantage of sweeping aside authentification problems. Certainty that a plece has oever left a historical abode until this century, or can at least be traced beyond reasonable doubt to a distant point in time, is a key factor to the value of French furniture. This explains the prices paid in recent years for furniture from English aristocratic mansions, most of which was acquired during or shortly after the French revolution. A verifiable provenance of that kind provides a soothing guarantee that the piece is not open to discussion.

There is perhaps oo other field where the occid for such guarantees is as strongly felt. French 18th-century has been copied almost the moment it to $385,000. The latter point reflects the recent ceased to be made. Copying was already thriving under Louis Philippe tendency at Sotheby's to give estimates based (1830-48), when some 18th-century cabinetmakers were still alive. It reached the peak of perfection in the early years of the Second Empire 1852-70), when only tool marks oo the underside of a veneer or technical details such as dovetailing will sometimes give away a copy.

Cabinetmakers' marks can hardly serve as criterion. Marking stamps have been handed down from one generation to another. When this reporter was first introduced to the fine art of cabinetmaking in Paris, a quarter of a century ago by the late André Félon, who did restoration work for the Louvre and Versailles, there were two marking stamps lying about the workshop. Stamping such marks in a convincing manner is child's play for a trained craftsman. Disputes over the authenticity of a stamp are, therefore, not easily resolved. Worse, doubts over the age of a piece sometimes linger even in the minds of those who have spent a lifetime handling furniture.

That inevitably sets a limit to the potential expansion of the market.

Self-teaching is difficult but possible in fields such as painting or silver. L is out of the question with furniture. Scholarly research has only just begun.

The difficulty of determining authenticity alone would account for the relatively small oumber of collectors of 17th- and 18th-century furniture. it is compounded by two serious handicaps. Furniture requires space, much more so than pictures — you can fit just so many commodes into the grandest house. Furniture also requires special care.

Whether in terms of assessment or preservation, collecting furniture implies a considerably greater effort than most other areas of collecting, including painting. For that reason it is unlikely ever to achieve financial parity with the greatest Old Master paintings, even if it will get gradually

The Ups and Downs of 19th-Century Art

"Printemps" (Spring) by William-Adolphe Oct. 19 at Sotheby's had been oo loan to the Bouguerean sold at Sotheby's for $75,000. A Portland Art Museum in Portland, Oregon, womao wearing a drapery that allows a generous bosom to appear walks barefoot in a parren landscape. She leers at a winged child whom she carries on her back. His hand raised, he is about to strike her gently with a twig.

The pretentions scene with its blend of mythological allusion — Eros striking at Aphrodite — and naturalistic handling of detail pitomizes the kitsch art of Bouguereau, much admired by the French upper class at the time when impressionism was seen by most as a sort of crazy artistic extremism.

The same auction included a landscape by Georges Michel, a French painter with a sense of light and shadow inherited from the 17thcentury Dutch school and a romantic feel for melancholic windswept plains. It remained unsold at $4,250, as Howard Rutkowski, Sotheby's expert, had leared might be the case. A bidder willing to go up to about $6,000 would probably have met the reserve set by the vendor and acquired the beautiful view, which would

- The contrast between the price of the Bouguerean and that of the Michel came as no surprise to professionals. Arbitrary classification characterizes the market for 19thcentury painting. The infinite aesthetic diversity of the period has yet to be fully explored and at very low prices. And no place is better for this than New York, however weak other currencies may seem against the dollar. One reason is that fashion plays a greater role in U.S. buying patterns than io Europe, leaving in the cold anything that falls outside its mainstream. Picture-postcard art, more courteously referred to as "academic," has been the rage for several years. Bouguerezu, with his pageant of sweetish, carefully done half-naked women, and his Hollywoodian palette, has been heading the list. Although prices have not returned to the level they reached before the 1981-1982 recession, they are still high.

But the French Romantic school of landscape painting is oot much in favor in the United States. The Barbizon painters do oot sell very well and their forerunners in the thirties and forties of the 19th century are virtually unknown to the American public. No one has heard of Georges Michel outside museum circles. His romanticism is too austere to be attractive to the uninitiated public, and his color scheme too dark - it consists in the main of blackish-greens, browns and mustardy yellows. Moreover, Michel left many works unsigned, Portland Art Museum in Portland, Oregon, which would normally be seen as a glamorizing factor, made no difference. Not a single bid came from the room. Another reason New York is a good place to buy paintings such as Michel's and those of related landscape painters of the mid-19th century is the context in which these works get bewildering diversity.

The Oct. 19 auetioo begao with a conventional still life done by a third-rate Austrian artist, Johann Knapp, in 1825; it sold for $13,200. The sale went on to a rather absurd interior scene by Jean-Baptiste Mallet - a young woman in the oude sits on the lap of her maid, sipping tea, in a drawing room decorated in the style of the late 1790s. It was bought in (failed to reach the minimum price set by the vendor and thus remained unsold) at $5,250. The auction included almost anything from a vast array of paintings by French and British academic artists to isolated works by Bonington, Delacroix and Turner.

In London, where sales are attended by large oumbers of dealers and private connoisseurs, good things rarely go unnoticed, even if they seem to be lost in an irrelevant context. New York is different. While these sales are also followed by European dealers — some make their living from buying and selling at U.S. auctions — the latter do not keep as close a watch as in Europe, essentially because of distance. Hence the fate of Georges Michel's

There were a few other failures Oct. 19. The most striking concerned a beach scene with fishing boats by Bonington. The attractive sketch, in oils, was unsigned; the British landscapist often did oot bother to leave his name. However, it has been accepted by Marion Spencer, the British expert who spent a lifetime studying his work. She will include it in ber catalogue raisonné of Bonington's paintings, as Sotheby's carefully noted in its entry. The composition is beautiful. At left, white and blueish cliffs lighted by a ray of sun are half hidden by fishing boats at anchor, while at right the strand, painted in touches of brown, red, and signatures are a key to success in the United distance under a broad sky. Mr. Rutkowski said States. Michel's work invariably sells badly or the sails of the boat were criticized by the

A sketch by Delacroix oarrowly missed being bought in too. "The Chaldean Shepberds," a study done in bold, oervous strokes, was hardly overpaid at $17,600.

Bonington and Delacroix seemed strangely out of place in an auction where the emphasis nave adopted a bizarrely oceanive definition of 19th-century European paintings. Uoder this label they lump anything that does not come under the heading impressionism or the later avant-garde movements of the 19th century for the painting of the 19th century for the bank of the Thames against a heat representation of the 19th century for the bank of the Thames against a heat representation of the 19th century for the painting of the 19th century for the 19th century for the painting of the 19th century for the painting of the 19th century for the painting of the 19th century for the 19th century f avant-garde movements of the 19th century. As dark, brownish water and a hill covered with a result, their sales are characterized by rusty, leafy trees. The painter has given great attention to detail, particularly costume, a major attraction to buyers of such paintings. Hence the $220,000 it made. The price is enormous - "a good price," Mr. Rutkowski commented with satisfaction even though his presale estimate had been higher still, $275,000 more on the highest conceivable price than on the probable figure. This can be harmful in a market that is very active but oot oearly as reckless as it was in 1980-1981. While the total sold Oct. 19 exceeded 54 million, 23 percent of the total was bought in. Despite heavy bidding from British, German have diversified their interest. As usual, they displayed unrestricted enthusiasm about Jean-François Millet, whom they consider one of the greatest French masters. His charcoal sketch of a couple of peasants walking to the fields was bought by the Japanese trade for $82,500. Japanese dealers also paid $38,500 for a Turner study in sepia wash for a landscape, "Conway Castle," that few Western dealers would seriously consider in view of its condition -it is faded and light-stained. The famous name and romantie hilly setting must have enflamed their imagination. More inexpected was the Japanese dealers' display of interest in very minor paintings of the Barbizon school, such as a landscape by Leon Richet, which they bought for $6,050.

The recent return of the Japanese after prolonged absence during the recession is an important phenomenon. But it does not affect paintings such as those of Georges Michel, who Harari & Johns Ltd is unknown to them and whose works do oo! have the realistic quality in landscape painting that they go in for. To those who are highly

The world has not wilted, gold is not $2,000 an ounce, people are still dining on pheasant under glass, Visigoths have not infiltrated the Vienna woods. As a corollary to the vision of the DJI escalating over 2500, we devote an Inordinate effort in detecting emerging equities before they spiral to prominence, as did a recently recommended "special situation", NIGHT-HAWK RESOURCES (on the Vancouver Exchange, symbol "NHWV") that vaulted from $2 to $14 before a 4-1 split. Now, at $4.50, "NHWV" appears poised for another dramatic upswing. In addition to reviewing "NHWV" our forthcoming letter advises the purchase of AMERADA HESS $26, PRICE COMMUNICATIONS (Nasdq - $10), and U.S. TOBACCO $36, entities that offer the duality of arithmetically increasing assets and earnings, shares that may be coveted by predators at premium prices. ## amic Banks May Win g Role in World Finance

By MOHAMMAD TARBUSH Inversa would Herald Tribune

T a time when high interest rates are driving more and more countries to the edge of bankruptcy, the arrival on the world market of substantial institutions offering interest-free loans could hardly be greeted with indiffer-Islamic banks and financial institutions are provoking the est of bankers, financial experts and journalists everywhere are now a familiar theme of international meetings, amic banking concepts ere derived from the Shari'a (Islamic Their underlining tenet is the prohibition of riba — which lly means usury and practically means interest - whether as irge or as a payment. By extension, all transactions with a inteed return are outlawed; each must bear an element of practice, injunctions of the Shari'a have been interpreted rently by a number of religious and Islamic banking authori with some Islamic instituslamic banking. Short of negotiating exemption clauses, aic banks in countries with conventional Western banking ans are therefore obliged to comply with local banking laws regulations. Consequently, although the Shari'a forbids plance of interest payments, these Islamic banks still have to part of their capital on deposit with the central bank of the orther, because of difficulties of placing their funds in the term, some Islamic banks are left with too much liquidity, e others, to avoid incurring losses, are believed to have ated from Islamic principles.

spite of such difficulties, the fact remains that as recently as sears ago, Islamic banks did not exist and now they do. :nty years ago, those Moslem countries that were not strugg to achieve political independence were busy experimenting 1 a host of alien ideas. Institutions looking to religion for stration were, rightly or wrongly, considered backward by ng officers and technocrats anxious to try out their newly uired Western techniques.

1 INCE then, many things bave changed in the Moslem world. First there was the upsurge of Islamic ideas in the 70s, which culminated in the establishment of an Islamic then there was the spectacular increase in the liquidity of some slem countries and a corresponding growth of their banking tors. For example, the number of Arab banks increased fold between 1968 and 1978. Finally, there is the growing unbling about foreign banks drawing colossal profits from ir operations in Moslem countries without making any serious ttribution to local needs, such as the financing of a hospital or

: building of a road, For all these reasons, the Islamic banking movement is likely to sustained as a significant new phenomenon that could have a table impact on the world of finance everywhere. According to the protagonists of this movement, both a moral well as a practical need existed for the establishment of Islamic nks and financial instilutions.

A moral need because commercial banking today views money a commodity and, by charging interest, uses money to make mey. In orthodox Islam, however, money is seen purely as a ans of exchange with no intrinsic value of its own. Unless ney is translated into a productive process, it is considered moral to pay a premium for it. That is why neither deposits (Continued on Page 15, Col. 4)

U.S. Rate Of Jobless Is Stable

October Figure Stayed at 7.4%

By Jane Seaberry
Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The unemployment rate remained unchanged last month at 7.4 percent, slightly below the rate when President

Ronald Reagan took office and vir-tually unchanged since May. The Labor Department, in its last unemployment report before the election on Tuesday, said 350,000 more people found jobs last month, raising the number of employed to 105.6 million, or 6.5 million more than when Mr. Reagan took office.

Hnwever, 8.4 millinn people were unemployed in October, 400,000 more than when the Reagan administration began. In additing, 5.5 million people are working part-time because they cannot find full-time work. About 1.2 million people are too discouraged about their job prospects to look for

The Reagan administration hailed the report as a confirmation of its economic program, while the AFL-CIO, which has endorsed Walter F. Mondale, the Democrat, criticized Mr. Reagan for showing bitle or no concern for the millions who can't find jobs."

The AFL-CIO said it is concerned that signs of a new recession will mean a "quick return to doub-le-digit joblessness."

Some economists inside and outside government said they expected the unemployment rate to rise in October. Production would have to grow at a rate of about 3.5 percent to prevent a rise in unemployment, nany economists have said

However, in the third quarter this year, the economy grew at a -percent rate.

Lawrence Chimerine, chief economist for Chase Econometrics said he was receiving reports about layoffs in the energy, manufacturing and financial industries.

Most of the new jobs were in services, where about three-fourths of all workers are employed, the Labor Department said. The number of manufacturing jobs in-creased by 55,000 in October, not enough to offset the decline of 125,000 factory jobs in September.

LONDON — Kleinwort, Benson Ltd. already has its share of choice clients.

Her Majesty's government for instance, is using the merchant bank as adviser for this month's sale of 50.2 percent of state-owned British Telecom-munications PLC, expected to raise about £3.75 billion ($4.57 billion) for the government.

If Kleinwort is preoccupied for the moment with this mammoth transaction, however, it is also plunging ahead with a transformation of its basic Kleinwort has picked up pieces in the United States and Australia as well as Britain.

All of the banks are groping for the right formu-la without knowing exactly bow deregulation will relashion the City, London's financial center.

Largely because of that risk, merchant bank shares have performed feebly over the past year on the London Stock Exchange. Although it is too early to say whether the tradition-laden banks can change their spots successfully, investment analysts rate Kieinwort as one of the better bets.

When its "jigsaw" is in place, predicts Christo-pher Phillips, bank analyst at P-B Securities, Kleinwort "will be one of the most formidable forces in the City."

The opening of the stock exchange to freer competition will let merchant banks and other outsiders own exchange member firms for the first time. Though brokers' carnings are widely expected to drop under the new regime, most major merchant banks are rushing in...

Dollar Plunges Amid Forecasts Of Lower Rates

NEW YORK - The dollar declined sharply Friday, after traders predicted a significant decline in interest rates. Gold prices rose. The dollar, which had been declining all day, fell further after Henry Kaufman, chief economist et Salomon Brothers, predicted that overnight interest rates would drop to 94-94 percent from the current 10 percent. Mr. Kaulman said the Federal Reserve is concerned by faltering growth in the money supply. But, he said, economic news remains favorable, and the weakening of the dollar "should not deter the Fed from encouraging the market."

Gold was sharply higher. In Zurich it closed at $342.50 an ounce, up from $333.50 Thursday, In London, gold also closed at $342.50, up nearly $7 from $335.75.

The dollar fell to less than 3 Deutsche marks in New York

Thursday for the first time since Sept. 12. It closed at 2.9415 DM, compared with 2.9828 on Thursday. Trading was thin, and dealers said that contributed to the slide. The dollar was off against all other major currencies. The pound closed at $1.253, up from $1.2365. The French franc strengthened to 9.0375 to the dollar, against 9.15; the Swiss franc tn 2.4195, compared with 2.452; and the yen to 241.92, against 244.15.

The dollar also registered major declines in Europe, as traders there also voiced expectations that U.S. interest rates would drop and that interest rates would drop and that the U.S. economy may be headed toward a downward trend.

The dollar dropped below 3 Deutsche marks at the Frankfurt opening. It was listed at 2.946 at the close. Dresduer Bank predicted that the dullar would average 2.60 DM throughout 1985, and that the demand for credit in the United States will lessen as the economy

Tokyo Stock Exchange Gearing Up for First Foreign Member At Price Tag of $4 Million a Seat, the Question Being Asked Is: Which Company Will It Be?

By Susan Chira New York Times Service

TOKYO - Not since the soldier-reformers of the American Occupation rewrote the rules of the Tokyo Stock Exchange more than 30 years ago has that institution faced greater changes.

For the first time, a foreign securities firm has a chance to buy a seat on the exchange. The possibility has prompted occasional consternation and incessant speculation in the financial world here, with some Japanese companies suggesting that foreign firms would be better off without membership, and most foreign firms hesitant about joining now.

But foreign membership is only Nov. 2 one of many issues facing the exchange following the government's decision last spring to relax some of the restrictions on Japan's capital markets. Spokesmen for the companies said they did not know specifically what information the Justice Department was requesting but said it concerned the military computer business of the two companies. The companies said they were confident that antitrust approval would still be granted.

Rolm, based in Santa Clara, California, is best known as a maker of business telephone equipment. But it also sells specially made rugged computers to the military, as does IBM. Rolm shareholders are scheduled to vote on the acquisition on computer capabilities with telephones. Rolm officials said the products were developed mostly by Rolm, not in collaboration with IBM.

that an investigation was under way. When asked whether his home and office had been wiretapped. Mr. Carlson said, "That's what the committee is trying to determine." "I think the committee has to deal with it," Mr. Carlson said in a telephone interview from his home in Avon, a suburb of Hartford. Under Connecticut law, wiretapping is a felony. The committee also is investigating allegations that Edward Hennessy, an earlier unsuccessful candidate to succeed Mr. Gray, also was the target of wiretaps while at United Technologies, the source said. Mr. Hennessy left UTC after battling with Mr. Gray and now is chairman of Allied Corp. The Wall Street Journal reported

Yugoslavia: Refocusing a Decentralized Economy

By Michael T. Kaufman

New York Times Service SKOPJE Yugoslavia — Here, in the capital of Yugoslavia's Macedonia Republic, as in the rest of this mosaic of a country, the watchwords these days are restructuring the economy and getting rid of its chronic losers.

in Beigrade, federal officials and economists sketch out scenarios they hope will ease an international debt burden of $20 billion, increase productivity and streamline an economy that in the past decade often has appeared to be moving in several directions at once. After all, this is a country that until recently had no effective central bank.

To this day, it is a country whose six republics administer separate shares of a rail network. Thus, a

THE BODY BOOK

By David Bodanis. 312 pp. $24.95. Little Brown, 34 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. 02106.

Reviewed by Richard Eder

THE English language is, and is not, enamored of the body. "I am somebody," Jesse Jackson has his followers repeat to remind them of their worth. Body ("if a body meet a body") means person; it almost means self. And yet it doesn't, quite. In the important cases of those present or specifically accounted for, we say: myself, not mybody; yourself, not yourbody. Only when self is a vague assertion, or indifferent, or not there at all, do we say: somebody, anybody, nobody.

Traditional Christianity resurrects the body at the end of time; meanwhile it mortifies it. Nowadays we abuse it, reform it or curtail it in the respective names of worksholism, jogging or a slender ideal. What we hardly do is listen to it. We love it for what it can do for us — sex, skiing, hammering nails - but not much for itself.

"The Body Book" is quite the reverse of this. It does not, except incidentally, tell you how to achieve thin thighs, a longer life, a better golf swing or a more picturesque orgasm. To David Bodanis, an American writer who lives in Europe, the corporal operations are fascinating and lovable for their own sakes. He has written about the body as if it were indeed a person; or rather, a whole uproarious company that includes such variously talented and irrepressible characters as the Vagus nerve, the salivary glands, the pituitary, the ovum and the tiny crocodile-shaped mites that live among the eyelashes and gobble up any facial bacteria straying up from the nose or across from the cheeks. The book is a narrative, of sorts, following the body through its day and providing detailed accounts of a number of phenomena and processes that we take for granted. It starts by waking us in the morning and goes on to take us through walking, eating, sex, conception, birth, stress, illness, emotions of various kinds and, at the end, to bed again.

Bodanis has a quirky sharpness, a gift for original and sometimes startling analogy, a taste for odd facts and figures, and a disposition to ramble into philosophical byways. At their best, these things turn familiar phenomena to unfamiliar angles, giving us mexpected and provocative views of the Take getting out of bed: "Up lifts the toosled head with one quick start, which is fine, but somewhat less quickly moves the brain within that head, which is less fine." Then Bodanis, uncurring his word-order but retaining the sprightliness, goes on to explain the inertial shocks that the brain — "dangling about rather loosely like an artichoke head moves.

That brings him to cerebrospinal fluid: "Every time the head moves during the day, twisting to the side to look out of a car window, or nodding vigorously forward in the presence of the boss, the cushioning fluid is not far behind, sloshing from side to side in just the right way to keep the brain cells where they belong, on the brain and not em-bedded in microscopically jagged crevices in the

> The mechanics of waking lead to speculation. We were dreaming of such things as flying or leaping or other kinds of boundlessness. Yet our first morning moves have to be made with reasonable circumspection because the cerebrospinal cushion is only so thick. This, Bodanis nicely points out, "hardens the line between the life of dreams" and ordinary living.

> There are any number of small facts, some engaging some disconcerting. A principal use of the fingernail, the author writes, is to anchor the flesh on the balls of the fingers so that when we pick something up we can hold it firmly. On the other hand, he asserts, a major source of children's cavities is the bacteria propagated on their toothbrush-

Bodanis's style is almost always entertaining. He can be too cute; words such as squish, squash, gurgle and squirt tend to crop up rather frequently; and when he personifies our organs we sometimes feel that a mess of little Walt Disney creatures is at work doing our smelling or our digesting.
His book, marred by misprints and one set of reversed pages, is helped by a series of splendidly reproduced plates showing stomachs brains, cheek patterns, chromosomes and saliva droplets. The saliva looks like golden rings; the chromosomes like a golden necklace. Alternating with these are some charmingly human photographs of peasants, football players and children.

"What a piece of work is man" Bodanis is telling us. Despite occasional silliness, and some flat spots, his book is a fair piece of work as well.

BADEN, Switzerland — Switzerland is slowly shrinking in land size but its mountains are gaining height, according to a topographic survey published Friday. The distance between the northern and the southern borders, up to 130.5 miles (210 kilometers), shortens anunally by about three millimeters. The Alps grow by about 1 to 1.5 millimeters. The survey is based on a comparison of data collected since 1906.

NFL WEEKEND

Los Angeles Raiders - they have not encountered a quarterback quite like Tony Eason of the Patriots, the one they will face Sunday in Eason's effectiveness emanates from his ability to throw on the run or run on the rollout. As a passer, be has completed 53.4 percent, 11 which have been for touchdowns. As a runner, he has scored four touchdowns.

Eason was one of the six quarterbacks taken on the first round of the NFL draft in 1983. He replaced Steve Grogan in the third game of this season, when the Patrints were trailing the Seattle Seahawks, 23-0, in the second quarter. The Patriots rallied to win, 38-23, and Eason has cal skills." Tom Jackson, the Broncos' nutside linebacker, said after watching films of the Patriots' vic-tory over the New York Jets last Sunday. "He can run away from people and can accelerate like a running back. He's also very effective at feeling where the rush is coming from yet, instinctively, he seems to always know where two or three receivers are when he has to

"You look at this team," Jackson said of the Patriots, "and you wonder if they're not better than 6-3." The opposite might be true of the Broncos: You look at them and wonder if they are as good as 8-1 would indicate. Their defense gives up so many yards that, according to the league rankings this week, they rate as the 24th-best team against the pass and 17th-best overall.

Yet this same defense has given up fewer points, 118, fewer touch-downs, 14, and fewer touchdown passes, 5, than any team in the league. The Broncos also lead the league with 24 interceptions - 12 -six touchdowns on returns of a fumble recovery or interception and a "give away-take away" ratio .

Miami Dolphins (9-0) at New York Jets (6-3) — The Jets could present problems for the Dolphins. Dan Marino's success has come rookie. Melville and Barnes are about to a large degree because his widely regarded as the best players line has protected him like the in their positions in England, but crown jewels. He has been sacked only three times. The Jets' defensive front, especially Mark Gastinean, is as active and clever a unit as the Dolphins are likely to see. Gastineau leads the league with 161/2 sacks. He, alone, could turn the game around. (Miami by 7.) Cleveland Browns (1-8) at Buffa-In Bills (0-9) - It is awfully difficult to see bow the Bills could wio even this game. Kansas City Chiefs (5-4) at Seattle Seahawks (7-2) — The Scahawks success in this game depeods upon the pressure their aproving defense can put on Chief quarterback Bill Kenney, who last Sunday completed 26 passes for 322 yards in a 24-20 victory over Tampa Bay. If the Sea-hawks distract Kenney the way they did Dan Fouts Monday night in the 24-0 victory over San Diegn, they should win their fourth in a row. (Seattle by 5½.)

San Diego Chargers (4-5) at Indianapolis Colts (3-6) — A rash of injuries always make a team look different. But lately, oot even Fouts has appeared to be his old self, In the last three games, all losses, Fouts has thrown seven intercep-tions. The Chargers' defense had been improving earlier in the season; now, it is going the other way. Thus the Cnlts have come along at a good time for the Chargers. The Colts have had offensive difficulties the last four games, scoring more than a touchdown only once.

Neil Lomax, the quarterback, has never played better. The Cardinal defense is among the league's best at stopping the run, and that should cause alarm for the Rams and their top rusher, Eric Dickerson. (St. Louis by 6.)

Philadelphia Eagles (4-5) at De-troit Lions (3-6) — It is doubtful that either team can climb into playoff contention, but the Lions probably oeed the victory more. They were swamped by the Packers in every facet of the game. The Eagles have demonstrated ability, winning three straight before losing last Sunday to the Cardinals. The Eagles need a more consistent running game to be taken seriously, but they just do oot have the personnel. (Detroit by 3.)

"Well, they're not guing tu stick their necks unt until they have the first Buchwald exit poll from Five Forks, Vermont."

"I'm not sure. The networks really have this election down pat. I wouldn't be surprised if they announced the winner on the 'Today, Good Morning America and CBS Morning News' shows." "You mean before the polls even Sure. They could du a sampling of the people who say they are going to vote and know exactly who will win."

"Maybe we should make our party a brunch?" Sol said. "No, 6 o'clock is okay. I like to look at all the maps and the sets they build for election night. Besides, there are a lot of good senatorial races, and we won't know the outcome of them until at least 8 "Margie wants to know when she should serve dinner."

"I think by 7:15, which is 4:15 on the West Coast. Then we wouldn't have tu worry about California." "Boy, it used to he fun on election nights when you didn't eat

Genghis Khan Film Planned The Associated Press

BELJING - China's state-run film industry is planning to make a feature film about the 13th-century Mongol conqueror Genghis Khan, the English-language newspaper China Daily reported Friday. It said Chinese star Xu Huanshan would play Genghis Khan, hut did uot give plot details or say when production would start.

"Stop pining for the good old days, Sol. When you depend on TV to give you the winners, you have to take them when they give them to "You would think television would withhold the results until everyone has voted, if for no other reason than they would keep their audiences at least until prime

"Prime time is awfully late for a network to wait to declare a winner. If you can tell the public who won with .09 of the vote two minutes before the other guy does, you've made a great contribution to the election process."

Sol said, "You know who I feel sorry for?"
"Who's that?" I asked.

"The people on the West Coast. They can't give election parties, because by the time they're driving home from work it's all over."

"I don't feel sorry for them. Nu one is forcing them to live out there. They knew they were throw-ing away their vote when television came in. Besides, there is nothing in the Constitution that says they can't go to a polling booth and pull a lever, even if it won't change anything."

"I guess you're right. Of course if il was a close race then they could have a rooting interest. It would be fun if California decided a presidential election for a change

"Elections aren't supposed to be fun. They're a serious business. If we had to depend on the West Coast to decide an American election, we might have to wait until 9 o'clock in the evening, and who, on the East Coast, wants to stay up that late?"

"Maybe Marge and I should forget about the election party," Sol said. "It seems like we're going to a lot of trouble when we know, before someone tries the avocado dip, who our next president is going to

"We could be surprised, Sol. Don't furget the opera isn't over until the fat lady sings." What time do you think that

"It's my guess the networks won't put her on until after the evening news."

Exploring the Arms Race on the Stage

By Hanns Neuerbourg Associated Press

BASEL — The German dramaist Rolf Hochbuth, who has long tackled political controversy on the stage, explores the furor over the arms race in his latest work.

"Never before have I written anything that could cause so much misunderstanding." Hochhuth says of "Judith," which is scheduled to open Nov. 9 in Glasgow's New Citi-In the play, a U. S. president is killed after he decides to resume production of chemical weapons. Some critics have said Hochhuth is anti-Ronald Reagan and he said he has been wrongly accused of equating the Reagan administration with Nazism.

Hochhuth was catapulted to controversial fame two decades ago with "The Deputy," which confronted the attitude of the Vatican toward the Nazi Holocanst.

In "Judith," a four-act tragedy to premiere three days after the U.S. presidential election, the president is killed with a dose of uerve gas sprayed by remote control from a microphone at a news conference. Judith, the assassin, is the widowed journalist daughter of an American diplomat and sister of a crippled Vietnam War veteran and fellow conspirator. Her brother is one of the thousands of soldiers who took part in a lawsuit filed against the manufacturers of the defoliant Agent Orange.

The president is never named. And in a preamble to the script, just released by the West German publisher Rowollt, Hochhuth says "the current president is not meant" because the play "presents a lasting prob-

Bot in an interview, Hochhuth conceded most people will assume the target is Ronald Reagan. "Hochhuth Kills Reagan," headimed a new West German magazine, New York-New York, And a review of the script in the German newsweekly Der Spiegel said Hochhuth "wants to turn the stage into an anti-Reagan tribunal."

The "play against the arms race madness," as he dubs it, is the latest in a series of factcum-fictiou morality plays by Hochhuth. Some had an impact which the late Bertolt Brecht, the most famous modern Germanlanguage playwright "could have only dreamed of," as one critic once said.

At the age of 32, Hochhuth indicted Pope Pius XII in "The Deputy" for failing to condemn the Nazi murder of six million Jews. It drew protests from the Vatican after its West Berlin premiere but has since been perfurmed in mure than 20 countries.

In 1967, "Soldiers," in which he insinuates that Winston Churchill cootrived the assassination of the anti-Communist Polish premier-in-exile General Władysław Sikorski in order to save the wartime alliance with the Soviet Union, was the last play banned in German playwright Rolf Hochbuth on his new play "Judith": "Never before have I written anything that could cause so much misunderstanding.

Britain under 17th-century censorship laws. It was played 122 times after the laws were

In the 1978 "A German Love Story," he exposed a West German state governor and a candidate for the Bonn presidency, Hans Filbinger, as a "terrible jurist" while serving litary prosecutor in the German Wehrmacht. Filhinger sued Hochhuth for libel, but ultimately had to resign. "Judith," named for the biblical Hebrew heroine said to have saved her town by bebeading the Assyrian General Holofernes while he slept at her side, also originally aimed at facts rather than fiction.

It first was meant to dramatize the wartime slaying of a Nazi commander killed when a Ukrainian woman who had managed to win his favors placed a mine under his bed. But Hochhuth made a radical change after reading reports of Reagan's comments on a "limited unclear war. "It would have been an escape if I treated the 'Judith' theme in a piece on something which happened 40 years ago," he explained.

"I realized this is to play in the present."
Now, the wartime episode is reduced to a prologue. Hochhuth fears this might be one reason that "Judith" could be misunder-"I have been told that some people may assume I want to draw a parallel between the Nazis and the Reagan administration," he explained. "But that is certainly not my intention.

There is no shortage of other controversial points. At one point, the script challenges the official version that Lord Mountbatten was killed by IRA terrorists in 1979. At another, he revives questions about the 1963 assassination of U.S. President John F. Kennedy.

Robert David MacDonald, directing "Judith" at Glasgow, said he will keep at least part of the prologue. "I think that 'parallelism' is a specifically German problem," he

On a recent visit to Hochhuth's Basel home, MacDonald said he asked for the first performance of "Judith" because "I find the play very interesting." Does he expect an uproar?

"I am really not very interested in a scan-dal," he said. "I think a play about anything important might always be found objectionable by some people. That's the way things

"Hochbuth manages to make the theaterinto a moralistic institution in a way that, honestly, I think no other dramatist alive still can do," he said, "Maybe Arthur Miller could do that some time ago. But Hochhuth is the only one left who can make the theater into. that sort of high-charged courtroom."

The letter described the book vard. The letter described the book as "truly brilliant." Nozick was quoted in The New York Times as saying he was "an innocent by-stander," and declined further comment. Random House Chairman Robert Bernstein said the forgery of the letter "would not allow us to pursue publishing the book," and Jason Epstein, the publishing firm's editorial director, said the book was a good one that "ought to be published, but not by us." Cooney said he forged the let-"out of desperation" because without it "no one in the world of publishing would even read the manuscript. П

Geraldine Ferraro became the first woman to mm for national office as part of a major party's presidential ticket and she went right to the top of the World Almanac's annual list of the 25 most influential women of 1984. Her short haircut is being imitated and one firm has developed a "Gerry" perfume. Earlier this week she was selected the best role model for young women. She is followed by Katharine Graham, Washington Post Company chairman of the board. Others on the list, who were not ranked in any order, include Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein, First Lady Nancy Reagan, former first lady Betty Ford, New York City Opera director Beverly Sills.

A feud over who will succeed the Count of Paris as pretender to the throne of France developed this week after the divorced Prince Henri of Orleans, the designated heir, remarried in a civil ceremony and was denied the claim to succession by his father. The 78-year-old Count of Paris, Henri of Orleans, who heads the House of France, the line of Bourbon-Orleans, on District. Construction is to begin Wednesday designated his grand- by next March.

The Bourbon-Orleans line gave France its last king, Louis Philippe, who ruled from 1830 to 1848. France exiled all pretenders to the throne in 1886. and the current Count of Paris was among those to spend a part of his life abroad. He returned to France in 1950 when the law against pretenders was lifted.

> New York City-born Harry Manilow disproved that old saw "you can't go home again" by selling out Radio City Music Hall for 10 nights and setting a box-office sales record of nearly $2 million. He got a standing ovation for his Hallow-een night performance, bidding farewell to the 10th mouth by introducing a song called "When October Goes," featured on his new album. The words for the song compliments of the late Johnny Mercer of "Moon River" fame. were found among the late lyricists' possessions. Mercer's wife asked Manilow to set the words to music - which Manilow called the thrill of his life. - .

H. Ross Perot will donate $10 million for the construction of a symphony hall that will be named after the president of Perot's electronics firm, symphony officials in Dallas say. The hump-sum cash payment, to be made in January, is one of the largest gifts ever made to any arts organization in the United States, Liener Temerlin, president of the Dallas Symphony Association, said Wednesday. The new symphony hall is to named for Morton H. Meyerson, president of Perot's Electronic Data Systems Inc., Temerin said. The 2,200-seat hall will be built in the city's Arts
